COOKE'S POCKET EDITION OF SELECT NOVELS.

COOKE'S POCKET EDITION OF SELECT NOVELS.

Mealfield

THE

ADVENTURES

0.12

PEREGRINE PICKLE.

IN WHICH ARE INCLUDED.

MEMOIRS OF A LADY OF QUALITY.

BY DR. SMOLLETT.

IN FOUR VOLUMES.

Cooke's Edition.

EMBELLISHED WITH SUPERB ENGRAVINGS.

VOL. III.

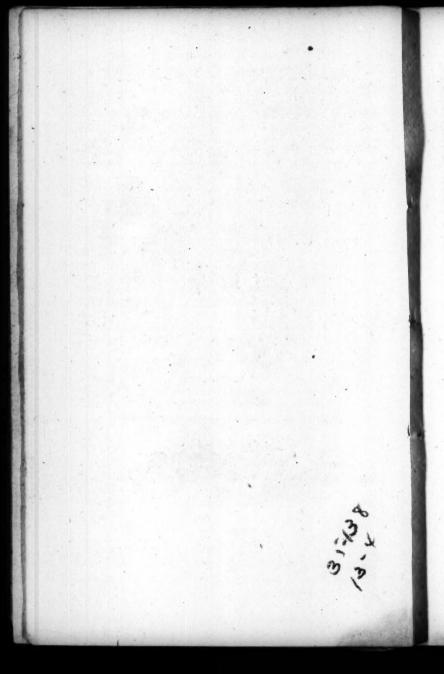

Refpicere exemplar vitæ morumque jubebo Doctum imitatorem, et veras hinc ducere voces

Hor.

London:

Printed for C. COOKE, No. 1-, Paternofler-Row; And fold by all the Bookfellers in Town and Country.

MY LORD,

THE turn which your lordship gave to the conversation of last night, having laid me under the necessity of vindicating the step I have lately taken in publishing Memoirs of my Life, I think I have a right to demand your opinion of the motives which I then explained; and this I ask by way of appeal to your judgment from the fentiments of those who might perhaps think my inducements were weak or frivolous. For, though no person in the company attempted to invalidate the arguments I advanced, I could perceive that one gentleman was not altogether convinced of the rectitude of that measure: you may remember he dropped several diffenting hints, couched in the modest expressions of, 'With submiffion to your ladyship's better judgment .- But, to be fure, you would not have taken fuch a step without first weighing the confequences.—Your provocations were certainly very great, although the world is apt to put the worst constructions upon every thing.'-And other fuch prudential infinuations, that are often more disconcerting than the displayed objections of a declared antagonist; because they seem to import something of great weight, which perfonal respect endeavours to isppress. These sententious fragments made such impression upon my mind, that I have been all night long tasking my recollection, in order to discover the weak side of my defence; but, as one always fees through the mist of partiality in one's own c ncerns, I must have recourse to your discernment, and feriously infift upon knowing how far you approve the justification of, my lord, your lordship's most obedient servant,

v. v. v. v.

ANSWER.

I CANNOT help observing, that the serious manner in which you ask my opinion of the motives which induced you to publish your Memoirs, is exactly of a piece with the conduct of those who consult their friends, for approbation rather than advice, and by a disappointment in their expectations of applause, are more than ever wedded to their own inventions. How would your ladyship look, should I now, in consequence of your demand, assume the air of a severe meralizer, and tell you, that the step you have taken, was altogether precipitate and inexcusable; that you have unnecessa-

Thy avowed your own indifcretion, incurred the refentment of individuals, and attracted the reproaches of a censorious world; and that, over and above these disadvantages, you have subjected yourself for ever to a life of domestick disquiet, by incenfing the tyrant of whom you complain, beyond a possibility of forgiveness or reconciliation? Would not all the refentment of a disappointed author take possession of your ladythip; overcast that chearfulness of countenance with a fullen frown, and lighten from those fair eyes in gleams of displeafure? No, you would be more furprized than offended at my observations. You would believe you had been all along deceived in your opinion of my delicacy and understanding: you would be mortified at the discovery of your own mistake, and look upon me with compassion, as one of those tame, timid rationalists, who being naturally phlegmatick and fearful, are utter strangers to the refined sensations of the human heart, incapable of doing justice to those melting tendernesses which they never felt, and too irresolute to withstand the torrent of ignorant, malicious, or wrong-headed clamour, when it affects a character in which their friendship ought to be interested. Your sentiments, I own, would in that case be just, excepting that I should engage your ladyship's pity, 1 deferving your contempt, and instead of being despised as a cold friend, be still regarded by you, as a weak and timorous well-wisher. If your character suffered cruelly from mifreprefentations; if your foibles were magnified and multiplied with all the aggravation of envy and fiction; if the qualities of your heart were decried or traduced, and even your understanding called in question; I agree with your ladyship, that it was not only excuseable, but highly necessary, to publish a detail of your conduct, which would acquit you of all or most of those scandalous imputations. This task you have (in my opinion) performed, to the fatisfaction of all the intelligent and unprejudiced part of mankind. He must be very deficient in candour and feeling, who, in reading your Memoirs, is not interested in your favour; who does not espouse the cause of beauty, innocence, and love; who does not see that as you once were, you would ftill have continued to be the pattern of conjugal faith and felicity; had not the crofs accidents of fortune forced you from the natural bias of your difposition: who does not excuse the tenderness, which youth and fenfibility, so circumstanced, could not possibly resist; and who

who does not freely forgive the fault, when he confiders the particulars of the temptation. He must be void of all taste and reflection, who does not admire your spirit, elegance, and fense; and dead to all the finer movements of the foul, if he is not agitated, thrilled, and transported, with the pathetick circumstances of your story. Some people, who are your ladyship's friends, and highly entertained with the performance, have wished you had spared yourself some unnecessary confessions, which they thought could serve no end, but that of affording a handle to your enemies for censure and defamation: I myfelf, I own, was of the fame opinion, until you convinced me, that in suppressing one circumstance which might be afterwards discovered, your fincerity through the whole piece would have been called in question. And what have you avowed, that your most malicious foes dire blame, except your difregard of an unnatural contract, which (though authorized by the laws of your country) was imposed upon your necessity, youth, and inexperience? Nor was this conduct the refult of vicious levity and intemperance: you had already given undeniable proofs of your constancy and conjugal virtue, to the first lord of your affections, who was the choice of your love, and to whom your heart was unalterably wedded. Your natural fenfibility had been, by his extraordinary care, tenderness, and attention, cherished and improved to fuch a degree of delicacy, as could not possibly relish the attachment of the common run of husbands. No wonder, then, that you was uneafy under a fecond engagement fo much unlike the first; that every circumstance of the contrast appeared to you in the most aggravating light, and made a fuitable impression upon your imagination; and that you was not infensible to those attractions which had formedly captivated your heart, nor able to refift the flattering infinuations, incredible affiduity, and furprizing perfeverance, of an artfullover. And fure he could not have chosen a more favourable opportunity to prefer his addresses: your passions were unusually intendered by grief; you was diffatisfied with your domestick fituation; you was folitary for want of that intimate connection in which you had been fo, happy before, and your breast glowed with the most pathetick fusceptibility, while you was yet a stranger to the insidious wiles of man. In fuch diffress the mind longs for Sympathy and confolation; it feeks to repose itself upon the tender A2

friendship of some kind partner, that will share and alleviate its forrows. Such a comforter appeared in the accomplished youth: your judgment was pleafed with his qualifications; his demeanor acquired your effeem; your friendship was engaged by his fincerity; and your affection was infenfibly fubdued. In fhort, every thing conspired to promote his suit, and my wonder is not that he succeeded, but that you held out fo long. Your fentiments with regard to those who have inveighed against your performance, are altogether conformable to that good-fense and benevolent disposition, which I have always admired and effected. As for writers who have exercifed their pens in abusing your ladyship, they are either objects of mirth or compassion. They, poor harmless creatures, in their hearts, wish you no evil. Their business is to eat, honeftly if they can-but, at any rate, to eat. I am fully perfuaded, that for a very small fum you might engige the whole tribe to refute their own revilings, and bellow with all their might in your praise. It would really be uncharitable as well as abfurd, to express the least resentment against such feeble antagonists, who are literally the beings of a fummer-day; they are the noisy insects, which the fun of merit never fails to produce; the shadows that continually accompany fuccess; and, indeed, a man might as well fight with his own shadow, as attempt to chastife such unsubstantial phantoms. But of all the emotions of your heart, that which I am at prefent tempted to applaud, is the forrow you express for having been obliged, in your own justification, to vilify and expose the man to whom your fate is inseparably connected; and the laudable resolution you have taken to live amicably with him for the future, provided he shall perfift in that conduct, which he hath of late chosen to maintain. On the whole, though you may have inflamed the virulence of envy and malice, rouzed the refentment of some whose folly and ingratitude you had occasion to display, and incurred the censure of those who think it their duty to exclaim against the least infringement of the nuptial tie, howfoever unequally imposed; your Memoirs will always be perused with pleasure by all readers of taste and discernment. and your fame as a beauty and author, long furvive the ill offices of prejudice and personal animosity. And now that I have performed the task enjoined, give me leave to add, that I have the honour to be, Madam, your most devoted humble fervant,

ADVENTURES

OF

PEREGRINE PICKLE.

CHAP. I.

Peregrine arrives at the Garrison, where he receives the last Admonitions of Commodore Trunnion, who next Day resigns his Breath, and is buried according to his own Directions. Some Gentlemen in the Country make a fruitless Attempt to accommodate Matters betwixt Mr. Gamaliel Pickle and his eldest Son.

A BOUT four o'clock in the morning our hero arrived at the garrison, where he found his generous uncle in extremity, supported in bed by Julia on one side, and Lieutenant Hatchway on the other, while Mr. Jolter administered spiritual consolation to his soul, and between whiles comforted Mrs. Trunnion, who, with her maid, sat by the fire, weeping with great decorum; the physician having just taken his last see, and retired, after pronouncing the fatal prognostick, in which he anxiously wished he might not be mistaken.

Though the commodore's fpeech was interrupted by a violent hiccup, he still retained the use of his senses; and when Peregrine approached, stretched out his hand with manifest signs of satisfaction. The young gentleman, whose heart overflowed with gratitude and affection, could not behold such a spectacle unmoved. He endeavoured to conceal his tenderness, which, in the wildness of his youth, and in the pride of his disposition, he considered as a derogation from his manhood; hood; but, in spite of all his endeavours, the tears gushed from his eyes, while he kissed the old man's hand; and he was so utterly disconcerted by his grief, that when he attempted to speak, his tongue denied its office: so that the commodore, perceiving his disorder, made a last effort of strength, and consoled him in these words. 'Swab the spray from your bowsprit, my good lad, and call up your spirits. You must not let the top-lifts of your heart give way, because you see me ready to go down at these years; many a better man has foundered before he has made half my way; thof I truft, by the mercy of God, I shall be fure in port in a very few glaffes, and fast moored in a most bleffed riding: for my good friend Jolter has overhauled the journal of my fins; and by the observation he hath taken of the state of my foul, I hope I shall happily conclude my voyage, and be brought up in the latitude of heaven. Here has been a doctor that wanted to flow me chock-full of physick; but when a man's hour is come, what fignifies his taking his departure with a 'pothecary's shop in his hold? These fellows come along-fide of dying men, like the messengers of the admiralty with failing orders: but I told him as how I could flip my cable without his direction or affiftance, and fo he hauled off in dudgeon. This curfed hiccup makes fuch a rippling in the current of my speech, that mayhap you don't understand what I say. Now, while the fucker of my wind-pump will go, I would willingly mention a few things, which I hope you will fet down in the log-book of your remembrance, when I am stiff, d'ye iee. There's your aunt fitting whimpering by the fire; I defire you will keep her tight, warm, and eafy in her old age: fhe's an honest heart in her own way; and thof she goes a little cran't and humourfome, by being often over-stowed with Nantz and religion, she hath been a faithful shipmate to me, and I dare fay never turned in with another man, fince we first embarked in the same bottom .-Jack Hatchway, you know the trim of her as well as garrison all the days of your life.'

ars

n's

ef.

its

er.

efe

bod

he

me

an

of

in

led

he

th

ily

ti-

ed

1's ire

WS

he

W

ft-

ed

ny

y.

I

pe

n-

int

ep

0-tle

ed

p-

lel'

as

r

Peregrine affured him, he would with pleafure comply with any request he should make, in behalf of two persons whom he esteemed so much. The lieutenant, with a waggish sneer, which even the gravity of the situation could not prevent, thanked them both for their good-will, telling the commodore, he was obliged to him for his friendship, in seeking to promote him to the command of a vessel which he himself had wore out in the service: that notwithstanding, he should be content to take charge of her, though he could not help being shy of coming after such an able navigator.

Trunnion, exhausted as he was, smiled at this fally; and, after fome paufe, refumed his admonitions in this manner. 'I need not talk of Pipes, because I know you'll do for him, without my recommendation; the fellow has failed with me in many a hard gale, and I'll warrant him as frout a feaman as ever fet face to the weather: but I hope you will take care of the rest of my crew, and not difrate them after I am dead, in fayour of new followers. As for that young woman, Ned Gauntlet's daughter, I'm informed as how she is an excellent wench, and has a refpect for you; whereby, if you run her on board in an unlawful way, I leave my curse upon you, and trust you will never prosper in the voyage of life; but, I believe you are more of an honest man, than to behave so much like a pinate. beg of all love, you wool take care of your constitution, and beware of running foul of harlots, who are no better than fo many mermaids, that fit upon the rocks at fea, and hang out a fair face for the deftruction of paffengers; thof I must say, for my own part, I never met with any of those sweet singers, and yet I have gone to sea for the space of thirty years. But howfomeyer, steer your course clear of all such brimstone bitches.

bitches. Shun going to law as you would shun the devil, and look upon all attornies as devouring sharks, or ravenous fish of prey. As foon as the breath is out of my body, let minute guns be fired, till I am fafe under ground. I would also be buried in the red jacket I had on when I boarded and took the Renummy. Let my pistols, cutlass, and pocket-compass, be laid in the coffin along with me. Let me be carried to the grave by my own men, rigged in the black caps and white thirts which my barge's crew were wont to wear; and they must keep a good look out, that none of your pilfering rascallions may come and heave me up again, for the lucre of what they can get, until the carcase is belayed by a tomb-stone. As for the motto, or what you call it, I leave that to you and Mr. Jolter, who are scholars; but I do desire, that it may not be engraved in the Greek or Latin lingos, and much less in the French, which I abominate, but in plain English, that when the angel comes to pipe all hands, at the great day, he may know that I am a British man, and speak to me in my mother tongue. And now I have no more to fay, but God in heaven have mercy upon my foul, and fend you all fair weather, wherefoever you are bound!' So faying, he regarded every individual around him with a look of complacency, and closing his eye, composed himself to rest, while the whole audience (Pipes himself not excepted) were melted with forrow; and Mrs. Trunnion confented to quit the room, that she might not be exposed to the unspeakable anguish of seeing him expire.

t

n

h

d u

n

h

C

t

0 ti

tl

a

a

n

tl

W

la

01

laid

His last moments, however, were not so near as they imagined; he began to dose, and enjoyed small intervals of ease till next day in the afternoon; during which remissions, he was heard to pour forth many pious ejaculations; expressing his hope, that, for all the heavy cargo of his sins, he should be able to surmount the puttock shrouds of despair, and get aloft to the cross-trees of God's good favour. At last, his voice sunk so low, as not to be distinguished; and having laid about an hour, almost without any perceptible signs of life, he gave up the ghost, with a groan which announced his decease.

de-

or

of

der

et I

Let

the

ave

nite

and

pil-

for

be-

vhat

are

aved

the

that reat

peak

nore

foul,

are

dual

ofing

au-

with

the

kable

they

nter-

uring

many ll the

nount

o the

voice

awing

Julia was no fooner certified of this melancholy event, than she ran to her aunt's chamber, weeping aloud; and immediately a very decent concert was performed by the good widow and her attendants. Peregrine and Hatchway retired till the corpse should be laid out; and Pipes having surveyed the body, with a face of rueful attention, Well fare thy soul, old Hawser Trunnion! faid he: 'man and boy I have known thee these sive and thirty years; and sure a truer heart never broke biscuit. Many a hard gale hast thou weathered; but now thy spells are all over, and thy hull fairly laid up. A better commander I'd never desire to serve; and who knows but I may help to set up thy ftanding rigging in another world!

All the fervants of the house were affected with the loss of their old master; and the poor people in the neighbourhood affembled at the gate, and by repeated howlings, expressed their forrow for the death of their charitable benefactor. Peregrine, though he felt every thing which love and gratitude could inspire on this occasion, was not so much overwhelmed with affliction, as to be incapable of taking the management of the family into his own hands. He gave directions about the funeral with great discretion, after having paid the compliments of condolence to his aunt, whom he confoled with the affurance of his inviolable efteem and affection. He ordered a fuit of mourning to be made for every person in the garrison, and inviting all the neighbouring gentlemen to the burial, not even excepting his father and brother Gam, who did not, however, honour the ceremony with their presence; nor was his mother humane enough to visit her fifter-inlaw in her diffress.

In the method of interment, the commodore's injunctions were obeyed to a tittle; and at the fame time our hero made a donation of fifty pounds to the poor of the parish, as a benefaction which his uncle had forgot to bequeath.

Having performed these obsequies with the most pious punctuality, he examined the will, to which there was no addition since it had been first executed; adjusted the payment of all the legacies; and being sole executor, took an account of the estate to which he had succeeded, and which, after all deductions, amounted to thirty thousand pounds. The possession of such a fortune, of which he was absolute master, did not at all contribute to the humiliation of his spirit, but inspired him with new ideas of grandeur and magnificence, and elevated his hope to the highest pinnacle of expectation.

His domestick affairs being fettled, he was visited by almost all the gentlemen of the country, who came to pay their compliments of congratulation, on his accesfion to the estate; and some of them offered their good offices towards a reconciliation betwixt his father and him, induced by the general detestation which was entertained for his brother Gam, who was by this time looked upon by his neighbours as a prodigy of infolence and malice. Our young fquire thanked them for their kind propofal, which he accepted; and old Gamaliel, at their intreaties, feemed very well disposed to an accommodation: but, as he would not venture to declare himself, before he had confulted his wife, his favourable disposition was rendered altogether ineffectual, by the instigations of that implacable woman; and our hero refigned all expectation of being reunited to his father's house. His brother, as usual, took all opportunities of injuring his character, by false aspertions and stories misrepresented, in order to prejudice his reputation: nor was his fifter Julia fuffered to enjoy her good fortune in peace. Had he undergone fuch perfecution from an alien to his blood, the world would have heard of his revenge; but, notwithstanding his indignation, he was too much tinctured by the prejudices of confanguinity, to lift his arm in judgment against the fon of his own parents; and this confideration abridged the term of his refidence at the garrison, where he had proposed to stay for some months.

CHAP. II.

The young Gentleman having settled his domestick Affairs, arrives in London, and sets up a gay Equipage. He meets with Emilia, and is introduced to her Uncle. HIS aunt, at the earnest solicitations of Julia and her husband, took up her quarters at the house of that affectionate kinfwoman, who made it her chief study to comfort and cherish the disconsolate widow: and Jolter, in expectation of the living, which was not yet vacant, remained in garrison, in quality of land-steward upon our hero's country estate. As for the lieutenant, our young gentleman communed with him in a ferious manner, about the commodore's propofal of taking Mrs. Trunnion to wife; and Jack, being quite tired of the folitary fituation of a batchelor, which nothing but the company of his old commander could have enabled him to support so long, far from discovering aversion to the match, observed with an arch smile, that it was not the first time he had commanded a vessel in the absence of Captain Trunnion; and therefore, if the widow was willing, he would chearfully stand by her helm; and, as he hoped the duty would not be of long continuance, do his endeavour to the steer her safe into port, where the commodore might come on board, and take charge of her again.

In confequence of this declaration, it was determined that Mr. Hatchway should make his addresses to Mrs. Trunnion, as soon as decency would permit her to receive them; and Mr. Clover and his wife promised to exert their influence in his behalf. Meanwhile, Jack was desired to live at the castle as usual, and assured, that it should be put wholly in his possession, as soon as he should be able to accomplish this matrimonial scheme.

for-

ous

was

the

ook

and ou-

, of

onte

with

ated

l by

e to

cef-

rood

ther

hich

by

pro-

uire

ac-

em-

is he had

ren-

that

ecta-

bro-

r his

ited,

fifter

Had

his

nge;

t his

ents ;

and

When Peregrine had fettled all these points to his own satisfaction, he took leave of all his friends, and Vol. III.

B repairing

repairing to the great city, purchased a new charlot and horses, put Pipes and another lacquey into rich liveries, took elegant lodgings in Pall Mall, and made a most remarkable appearance among the people of fafhion. It was owing to this equipage, and the gaiety of his personal deportment, that common fame, which is always a common liar, represented him as a young gentleman who had just succeeded to an estate of five thousand pounds per annum, by the death of an uncle; that he was intitled to an equal fortune at the decease of his own father, exclusive of two considerable jointures, which would devolve upon him at the demise of his mother and aunt. This report (false and ridiculous as it was he could not find in his heart to contradict; not but that he was forry to find himself so misrepresented: but his vanity would not allow him to take any step that might diminish his importance in the opinion of those who courted his acquaintance, on the supposition that his circumstances were actually as affluent as they were faid to be. Nay, fo much was he infatuated by this weakness, that he resolved to encourage the deception, by living up to the report: and accordingly engaged in the most expensive parties of pleafure; believing that, before his present finances should be exhausted, his fortune would be effectually made, by the personal accomplishments he should have occafion to display to the beau monde, in the course of his extravagance. In a word, vanity and pride were the ruling foibles of our adventurer, who imagined himfelf fufficiently qualified to retrieve his fortune in various shapes, long before he could have any idea of want or difficulty. He thought he should have it in his power, at any time, to make prize of a rich heirefs, or opulent widow: his ambition had already aspired to the heart of a young handsome duchess dowager, to whose acquaintance he had found means to be introduced; or, should matrimony chance to be unsuitable to his inclinations, he never doubted, that by the interest he might acquire among the nobility, he should be favoured with fome some lucrative post, that would amply recompense him for the liberality of his disposition. There are many young men who entertain the fame expectations, with half the reason he had to be so presumptuous.

In the midft of these chimerical calculations, his pasfion for Emilia did not subside; but, on the contrary, began to rage to fuch an inflammation of defire, that her idea interfered with every other reflection, and abfolutely disabled him from profecuting the other lofty schemes which his imagination had projected. He therefore laid down the honest resolution of visiting her in all the splendor of his situation, in order to practise upon her virtue with all his art and address, to the utmost extent of his influence and fortune. Nay, so effectually had his guilty paffron abforbed his principles of honour, conscience, humanity, and regard for the commodore's last words, that he was base enough to rejoice at the absence of his friend Godfrey, who being then with his regiment in Ireland, could not dive into his purpose, or take measures for frustrating his vicious defign.

Fraught with these heroick sentiments, he determined to fet out for Suffex in his chariot and fix, attended by his valet de chambre and two footmen; and as he was now fensible, that in his last essay he had mistaken his cue, he determined to change his battery, and fap the fortress by the most submissive, soft, and infinuating behaviour.

ot

li-

a

a-

tv

ch

ng

ive

le;

afe

in-

of

cu-

ra-

rif-

to

in

on

as

was

en-

and

lea-

ould

ade,

cca-

his

the

nfelf

ious

at or

wer,

alent

neart

ac-

or,

ncli-

night

with

me

On the evening that preceded this purposed expedition, he went into one of the boxes at the playhouse, as usual, to shew himself to the ladies; and in reconnoitering the company through a glass, (for no other reafon, but because it was fashionable to be purblind) perceived his miftress very plainly dressed, in one of the feats above the stage, talking to another young woman of a very homely appearance. Though his heart beat the alarm with the utmost impatience at fight of his Emilia, he was for fome minutes deterred from obeying the impulse of his love, by the presence of some ladies of fashion, who, he feared, would think the worse of him, should they see him make his compliment in publick to a person of her figure. Nor would the violence of his inclination have so far prevailed over his pride, as to lead him thither, had not he recollected, that his quality friends would look upon her as some handsome Abigail, with whom he had an affair of gallantry, and of consequence give him credit for the intrigue. Encouraged by this fuggestion, he complied with the dictates of love, and flew to the place where his charmer fat. His air and dress were so remarkable, that it was almost impossible he should have escaped the eyes of a curious observer, especially as he had chosen a time for coming in, when his entrance could not fail to attract the notice of the spectators; I mean, when the whole house was hushed in attention to the performance on the stage. Emilia, therefore, perceived him at his first approach; she found herself discovered by the direction of his glass, and guesting his intention by his abrupt retreat from the box, fummoned all her fortitude to her aid, and prepared for his reception. He advanced to her with an air of eagerness and joy, tempered with modesty and respect, and expressed his fatisfaction at feeing her, with a feeming reverence of regard. Though the was extremely well pleafed at this unexpected behaviour, the suppressed the emotions of her heart, and aniwered his compliments with affected ease and unconcern, such as might denote the good-humour of a person who meets by accident with an indifferent acquaintance. After having certified himself of her own good health, he very kindly enquired about her mother and Miss Sophy; gave her to understand, that he had lately been favoured with a letter from Godfrey; that he had actually intended to fet out next morning on a vifit to Mrs. Gauntlet, which (now that he was so happy as to meet with her) he would postpone, until he should have the pleasure of attending her to the country. After having thanked him for his polite intention, she told him, that her mother was expected in town in a few days, and that she herself had come to London fome weeks ago, to give her attendance upon her aunt; who had been dangerously ill, but was now pretty well recovered.

rorse

nt in

vio-

r his

Eted,

fome

gale in-

plied

vhere ark-

have

is he

rance

s; I

on to per-

f dif-

g his

oned

ecep-

reffed

rence fed at

tions h af-

te the

with

rtified iquir-

o un-

letter

et out

(now

would

m for

er was If had come

Although the conversation of course turned upon general topicks, during the entertainment he took all opportunities of being particular with his eyes, through which he conveyed a thousand tender protestations. She faw, and inwardly rejoiced at the humility of his looks; but far from rewarding it with one approving glance, the industriously avoided this ocular intercourse, and rather coquetted with a young gentleman that ogled her from the opposite box. Peregrine's penetration easily detected her sentiments, and he was nettled at her diffimulation, which ferved to confirm him in his unwarrantable deligns upon her person. He perfifted in his affiduities with indefatigable perfeverance: when the play was concluded, handed her and her companion to an hackney-coach, and with difficulty was permitted to efcort them to the house of Emilia's uncle, to whom our hero was introduced by the young lady, as an intimate friend of her brother Godfrey.

The old gentleman, who was no stranger to the nature of Peregrine's connection with his fifter's family, prevailed upon him to ftay supper, and seemed particularly well pleased with his conversation and deportment, which, by help of his natural fagacity, he wonderfully adapted to the humour of his entertainer. After fupper, when the ladies were withdrawn, and the citizen called for his pipe, our fly adventurer followed his example. Though he abhorred the plant, he smoaked with an air of infinite fatisfaction, and expatiated upon the virtues of tobacco, as if he had been deeply concerned in the Virginia trade. In the progress of the discourse, he consulted the merchant's disposition; and the national debt coming upon the carpet, held forth upon the funds like a professed broker. the alderman complained of the restrictions and difcouragement of trade, his guest inveighed against exorbitant duties, with the nature of which he feemed as well

B 3

well acquainted as any commissioner of the customs; so that the uncle was astonished at the extent of his knowledge, and expressed his surprise, that a gay young gentleman like him, should have found either leisure or inclination to consider subjects so foreign to the fashionable amusements of youth.

Pickle laid hold on this opportunity to tell him, that he was descended from a race of merchants; and, that early in life, he had made it his business to instruct himself in the different branches of trade, which he not only studied as his family profession, but also as the source of all our national riches and power. He then launched out in praise of commerce, and the promoters thereof; and by way of contrast, employed all his ridicule, in drawing such ludicrous pictures of the manners and education of what is called high life, that the trader's sides were shaken by laughter, even to the danger of his life; and he looked upon our adventurer as a miracle of sobriety and good-sense.

Having thus ingratiated himself with the uncle, Peregrine took his leave, and next day in the forenoon visited the niece in his chariot, after she had been admonished by her kinsman to behave with circumspection, and cautioned against neglecting or discouraging the addresses of such a valuable admirer.

CHAP. III.

He prosecutes his Design upon Emilia with great Art and Perseverance.

OUR adventurer, having by his hypocrify obtained free accels to his mistres, began the siege, by professing the most sincere contrition for his former levity, and imploring her forgiveness with such earnest supplication, that, guarded as she was against his flattering arts, she began to believe his protestations, which were even accompanied with tears, and abated a good deal of that severity and distance she had proposed to maintain during this interview. She would not, however, favour him with the least acknowledgment of a mutual passion, because, in the midst of his vows of eternal constancy constancy and truth, he did not mention one fyllable of wedlook, though he was now entirely master of his own conduct; and this confideration created a doubt which fortified her against all his attacks: yet, what her discretion would have concealed, was discovered by her eyes, which, in spite of all her endeavours, breathed forth complacency and love. For her inclination was flattered by her own felf-fufficiency, which imputed her admirer's filence, in that particular, to the hurry and perturbation of his spirits, and persuaded her, that he could not possibly regard her with any other than honourable intentions.

The infidious lover exulted in the tenderness of her looks, from which he prefaged a compleat victory; but, that he might not over-shoot himself by his own precipitation, he would not run the risk of declaring himself, until her heart should be so far entangled within his fnares, as that neither the fuggestions of honour, prudence, or pride, fhould be able to difengage it. Armed with this resolution, he restrained the impatience of his temper within the limits of the most delicate deportment. After having folicited and obtained permission to attend her to the next opera, he took her by the hand, and preffing it to his lips in the most respectful manner, went away, leaving her in a most whimfical state of suspense, chequered with an interesting vifficitude of hope and fear.

On the appointed day, he appeared again about five o'clock in the afternoon, and found her native charms fo much improved by the advantages of drefs, that he was transported with admiration and delight; and while he conducted her to the Hay-Market, could scarce bridle the impetuosity of his passion, so as to observe the forbearing maxims he had adopted. When she entered the pit, he had abundance of food for the gratification of his vanity; for, in a moment, the eclipfed all the female part of the audience, each individual allowing in her own heart, that the stranger ns; fo knowg genor infhionn, that

, that nftruct he not as the le then moters his rimanhat the ne daner as a le, Perenoon en admipecraging

reat

btained by prolevity, Jupplittering h were od deal mainowever, mutual eternal stancy was by far the handsomest woman there present, except

ft

b

fi

P

P

di

in

to

hi

cl ar

fe

ba

m ta

cl

fa

fo

po

SI

ho

be

ho

en

he

tic

bu

fix

ci

herfelf.

Here it was that our hero enjoyed a double triumph; he was vain of this opportunity to enhance his reputation for gallantry among the ladies of fashion, who knew him, and proud of an occasion to display his quality acquaintance to Emilia, that she might entertain the greater idea of the conquest she had made, and pay the more deference to his importance in the fequel of his addresses. That he might profit as much as possible by this fituation, he went up and accosted every person in the pit, with whom he ever had the least communication; whispered and laughed with an affected air of familiarity, and even bowed at a distance to some of the nobility, on the flender foundation of having stood near them at court, or presented them with a pinch of rappee at White's chocolate-house.

This ridiculous oftentation, though now practifed with a view of promoting his defign, was a weakness that in some degree infected the whole of his behaviour; for nothing gave him so much joy in conversation, as an opportunity of giving the company to understand, how well he was with persons of distinguished rank and character: he would often (for example) observe, as it were occasionally, that the Duke of G—— was one of the best-natured men in the world, and illustrate this affertion by some instance of his affability, in which he himself was concerned; then, by an abrupt transition, he would repeat some repartee of Lady T——, and mention a certain bon mot of the Earl of C——, which was uttered in his hearing.

Abundance of young men, in this manner, make free with the names, though they have never had access to the persons of the nobility; but this was not the case with Peregrine, who, in consideration of his appearance and supposed fortune, together with the advantage of his introduction, was by this time freely admitted to the tables of the great.

In the return with Emilia from the opera, though he ftill ftill maintained the most scrupulous decorum in his behaviour, he plied her with the most passionate expressions of love, squeezed her hand with great servency, protested that his whole soul was engrossed by her idea, and that he could not exist independent of her savour. Pleased as she was with his warm and pathetick addresses, together with the respectful manner of his making love, she yet had prudence and resolution sufficient to contain her tenderness, which was ready to run over; being fortissed against his arts, by respecting, that if his aim was honourable, it was now his business to declare it. On this consideration, she refused to make any serious reply to his earnest expostulations, but affected to receive them as the undetermined essusions of gallantry and good-breeding.

This fictitious gaiety and good-humour, though it baffled his hope of extorting from her an acknowledgment of which he might have taken immediate advantage, nevertheless encouraged him to observe, (as the chariots passed along the Strand) that the night was far advanced; that supper would certainly be over before they could reach her uncle's house; and to propose, that he should wait upon her to some place, where they might be accommodated with a slight refreshment. She was offended at the freedom of this proposal; which, however, she treated as a joke, thanking him for his courteous offer, and assuring him, that when she should be disposed for a tavern treat, he alone should have the honour of bestowing it.

pt

h;

a-

ho

nis

er-

nd

ael

38

ery

m-

ted

me

ing

1 a

fed

iefs

ur;

, as

nd,

and

s it

e of

this

n he

юn,

and

nich

nake

cefs

the

ap-

ad-

reely

h he

ftill

Her kinsman being engaged with company abroad, and her aunt retired to rest, he had the good fortune to enjoy a tête-à-tête with her during a whole hour, which he employed with such consummate skill, that her caution was almost overcome. He not only assailed her with the artillery of sighs, vows, prayers, and tears, but even pawned his honour in behalf of his love. He swore with many imprecations, that although her heart were surrendered to him at discretion, there was a principle within him, which would never allow him to injure fuch innocence and beauty; and the transports of his passion had, upon this occasion, so far over-shot his purpose, that if she had demanded an explanation, while he was thus agitated, he would have engaged himself to her wish by such ties, as he could not possibly break with any regard to his reputation. But from fuch expostulation she was deterred, partly by pride, and partly by the dread of finding herfelf mistaken in fuch an interesting conjecture. She therefore enjoyed the present flattering appearance of her fate, was prevailed upon to accept the jewels, which he purchased with part of his winning at Bath, and with the most enchanting condescension submitted to a warm embrace; when he took his leave, after having obtained permiffion to visit her, as often as his inclination and convenience would permit.

ſe

ſei

qu th

la

n

tre

W

Sec.

ar

uj ho

or

E

th

m

he

for

H

he

ha

he

ha

ne

In his return to his own lodgings, he was buoyed up with his fuccess to an extravagance of hope; already congratulated himself upon his triumph over Emilia's virtue; and began to project future conquests among the most dignified characters of the semale sex. But his attention was not all dissipated by these vain reflections; he resolved to concentrate the whole exertion of his soul upon the execution of his present plan; desisted, in the mean time, from all other schemes of pleasure, interest, and ambition; and took lodgings in the city, for the more commodicus accomplishment of his purpose.

While our lover's imagination was thus agreeably regaled, his miftress did not enjoy her expectations, without the intervention of doubts and anxiety. His filence touching the final aim of his addresses was a mystery on which she was afraid of exercising her sagacity; and her uncle tormented her with inquiries into the circumstances of Peregrine's professions and deportment. Rather than give this relation the least cause of suspicion, which must have cut off all intercourse betwixt her and her admirer, she said every thing which she thought would satisfy his care and concern for her welfare; and in consequence of such representation, she enjoyed, enjoyed, without referve, the company of our adventurer, who profesuted his plan with furprizing eagerness and perseverance.

CHAP. IV.

He prevails upon Emilia to accompany him to a Masquerade; makes a treacherous Attempt upon her Affection, and meets with a deferved Repulle.

CARCE a night elapsed in which he did not conduct her to some publick entertainment. by the dint of his infiduous carriage, he thought himfelf in full possession of her confidence and affection, he lay in wait for an opportunity; and hearing her obferve in conversation, that she had never been at a masquerade, begged leave to attend her to the next ball; at the fame time, extending his invitation to the young lady, in whose company he had found her at the play, the being present when this subject of discourse was introduced. He had flattered himself that this gentlewoman would decline the proposal, as she was a person feemingly of a demure disposition, who had been born and bred in the city, where fuch diversions are looked upon as scenes of lewdness and debauchery. For once, however, he reckoned without his hoft; curiofity is as prevalent in the city as at the court end of the town: Emilia no fooner fignified her affent to his propofal, than her friend, with an air of fatisfaction, agreed to make one of the partie; and he was obliged to thank her for that complaifance which laid him under infinite mortification. He fet his genius at work, to invent some scheme for preventing her unseasonable intrusion. Had an opportunity offered, he would have acted as her physician, and administered a medicine that would have laid her under the necessity of staying at home; but his acquaintance with her being too flight to furnish him with the means of executing this expedient, he devised another, which was practifed with all imaginable fuccess. Understanding that her grandmother had left her a fum of money independent of her parents, he conveyed a letter to her mother, intimating, that her daughter,

t his tion, aged offifrom

s of

ride, en in joyed prehafed most race; rmisonve-

ed up ready nilia's mong

But reflecion of fifted, re, inty, for pose.

eeably ations,
His was a fagaes into leport-ause of rse bewhich for her ion, fhe

joyed,

daughter, on pretence of going to the masquerade, intended to bestow herself in marriage on a certain person, and that in a few days she would be informed of the circumstances of the whole intrigue, provided she would keep this information secret, and contrive some excuse for detaining the young lady at home, without giving her cause to believe she was apprized of her intention. This billet, subscribed, 'Your well-wisher, and unknown humble fervant,' had the desired effect upon the careful matron; who, on the ball-day, seigned herself so extremely ill, that Miss could not, with any decency, quit her mamma's apartment; and therefore sent her apology to Emilia in the afternoon, immediately after the arrival of Peregrine, who pretended to be very much afflicted with the disappointment, while

1

t

V

d

tl

t

p

el

h

B

th

pe

in

he

uj

ti

tie

hi

hi

pr

p: bl

ta

his heart throbbed with a transport of joy.

About ten o'clock the lovers fet out for the Hay-Market, he being dreffed in the habit of a Pantaloon, and the in that of Columbine; and they had scarce entered the house, when the musick struck up, the curtain was withdrawn, and the whole scene displayed at once, to the admiration of Emilia, whose expectation was infinitely surpassed by this exhibition. Our gallant having conducted her through all the different apartments, and described the economy of the place, led her into the circle, and, in their turn, they danced feveral minuets; then going to the fide-board, he prevailed upon her to eat some sweetmeats and drink a glass of Champagne. After a fecond review of the company, they engaged in country-dances, at which exercise they continued, until our adventurer concluded, that his partner's blood was sufficiently warmed for the prosecution of his defign. On this supposition, which was built upon her declaring, that she was thirsty and fatigued, he perfuaded her to take a little refreshment and repose; and for that purpose, handed her down stairs into the eating-room, where, having feated her on the floor, he presented her with a glass of wine and water; and, as the complained of being faint, enriched the draught with

in-

er-

of

flie ome

out

in-

her, fect

gn-

vith

ere-

me-

d to hile

lay-

oon,

en-

rtain

nce,

s inhav-

ents,

into

mi-

upon nam-

they

conpart-

ution

built

gued, pose;

o the

or, he

id, as

aught

with

pretence

with fome drops of a certain elixir, which he recommended as a most excellent restorative, though it was no other than a stimulative tincture, which he had treacherously provided for the occasion. Having swallowed this potion, by which her spirits were manifestly exhilirated, she ate a slice of ham, with the wing of a cold pullet, and concluded the meal with a glass of Burgundy, which the drank at the earnest intreaty of her admirer. These extraordinary cordials co-operating with the ferment of her blood, which was heated by violent motion, could not fail to affect the constitution of a delicate young creature, who was naturally fprightly and volatile. Her eyes began to sparkle with unufual fire and vivacity, a thousand brilliant fallies of wit escaped her, and every mask that accosted her underwent fome fmarting repartee.

Peregrine, overjoyed at the fuccess of his administration, proposed that they should resume their places at the country-dances, with a view to promote and affift the efficacy of his elixir; and when he thought her difposition was properly adapted for the theme, began to ply her with all the elocution of love. In order to elevate his own spirits to that pitch of resolution which his scheme required, he drank two whole bottles of Burgundy, which inflamed his paffion to fuch a degree, that he found himself capable of undertaking and perpetrating any scheme for the gratification of his defire.

Emilia, warmed by fo many concurring incentives, in favour of the man she loved, abated considerably of her wonted referve, listened to his protestations with undifferabled pleasure, and in the confidence of her fatisfaction, even owned him absolute master of her affections. Ravished with this confession, he now deemed himself on the brink of reaping the delicious fruits of his art and affiduity; and the morning being already pretty far advanced, affented with rapture to the first proposal she made of retiring to her lodgings. blinds of the chariot being pulled up, he took advantage of the favourable fituation of her thoughts, and on VOL. III.

pretence of being whimfical, in confequence of the wine he had swallowed, clasped her in his arms, and imprinted a thousand kisses on her pouting lips, a freedom which she pardoned as the privilege of intoxication. While he thus indulged himself with impunity, the carriage halted, and Pipes opening the door, his master handed her into the passage, before she perceived that it was not her uncle's house, at which they had alighted.

Alarmed at this discovery, she with some consusion desired to know his reason for conducting her to a strange place at these hours: but he made no reply, until he had led her into an apartment, when he gave her to understand, that as her uncle's family must be disturbed by her going thither so late in the night, and the streets near Temple-bar were insested by a multitude of robbers and cut-throats, he had ordered his coachman to halt at this house, which was kept by a relation of his, a mighty good fort of a gentlewoman, who would be proud of an opportunity to accommodate a person for whom he was known to entertain such tenderness and esteem.

Emilia had too much penetration to be imposed upon by this plaufible pretext: in spite of her partiality for Peregrine, which had never been inflamed to fuch a pitch of complacency before, she comprehended his whole plan in a twinkling. Though her blood boiled with indignation, fhe thanked him with an affected air of ferenity for his kind concern, and expressed her obligation to his coufin; but, at the fame time, infifted upon going home, left her absence should terrify her uncle and aunt, who she knew would not retire to reft till her return. He urged her, with a thousand remonstrances, to consult her own ease and fafety, promising to send Pipes into the city, for the satisfaction of her relations: but finding her obstinately deaf to his intreaties, he affured her, that he would in a few minutes comply with her request; and, in the mean time, begged the would fortify herfelf against the cold with a cordial, which he poured out in her prefence, and which

te

b

W

ne

t-

m

n.

he

ter

nat

ed.

ion

a

un-

her

lif-

the

nde

ch-

tion

uld

rfon

nefs

up-

ality

ch a

his

oiled

d air

ob-

fifted

her

reft

re-

pro-

ctions

o his

mi-

time.

vith a

and

hich

which (now that her suspicion was arouzed) she refused to tafte, notwithstanding all his importunities. He then fell upon his knees before her, and the tears gushing from his eyes, fwore that his paffion was wound up to fuch a pitch of impatience, that he could no longer live upon the unfubstantial food of expectation; and that, if the would not vouchfafe to crown his happiness, he would forthwith facrifice himself to her disdain. an abrupt address, accompanied with all the symptoms of frantick agitation, could not fail to perplex and affright the gentle Emilia; who, after some recollection, replied with a resolute tone, that she could not see what reason he had to complain of her reserve, which she was not at liberty to lay entirely aside, until he should have avowed his intentions in form, and obtained the fanction of those whom it was her duty to obey. Divine creature!' cried he, feizing her hand, and preffing it to his lips, 'it is from you alone I hope for that condefcension, which would overwhelm me with transports of celeftial blifs. The fentiments of parents are fordid, filly, and confined; feek not then to subject my passion to such low restrictions as were calculated for the purposes of common life. My love is too delicate and refined to wear those vulgar fetters, which ferve only to destroy the merit of voluntary affection, and to upbraid a man incessantly with the articles of compulsion, under which he lies. My dear angel! pare me the mortification of being compelled to love you, and reign fole empress of my heart and fortune. I will not affront you fo much as to talk of fettlements; my all is at your disposal. In this pocket-book are notes to the amount of two thousand pounds; do me the pleasure to accept of them; to-morrow I will lay ten thousand more in your lap. In a word, you shall be miftrefs of my whole eftate, and I shall think myself happy in living dependent on your bounty!'

Heavens! what were the emotions of the virtuous, the sensible, the delicate, the tender Emilia's heart, when she heard this insolent declaration from the mouth of a man whom she had honoured with her affection and esteem! It was not simply horror, grief, or indignation, that she felt, in consequence of this unworthy treatment, but the united pangs of all together, which produced a fort of hysterick laugh, while she told him, that she could not help admiring his generosity.

Deceived by this convulsion, and the ironical compliment that attended it, the lover thought he had already made great progrefs in his operations, and that it was now his bufiness to storm the fort by a vigorous assault, that he might spare her the confusion of yielding without refistance. Possessed by this vain suggestion, he started up, and folding her in his arms, began to obey the furious dictate of his unruly and ungenerous defire. With an air of cool determination, the demanded a parley; and when, upon her repeated request, he granted it, addressed herself to him in these words, while her eyes gleamed with all the dignity of the most awful refentment. 'Sir, I fcorn to upbraid you with a repetition of your former vows and protestations, nor will I recapitulate the little arts you have practifed to enfnare my heart; because, though by dint of the most perfidious diffimulation, you have found means to deceive my opinion, your utmost efforts have never been able to lull the vigilance of my conduct, or to engage my affection beyond the power of difcarding you without a tear, whenever my honour should demand such a facrifice. Sir, you are unworthy of my concern or regret, and the figh that now struggles from my breast, is the refult of forrow, for my own want of difcernment. As for your prefent attempt upon my chaftity, I despise your power as I detest your intention. Though, under the mask of the most delicate respect, you have decoyed me from the immediate protection of my friends, and contrived other impious stratagems to ruin my peace and reputation, I confide too much in my own innocence, and the authority of the law, to admit one thought of fear, much less to fink under the horror of this shocking situation, into which I have been

Sir, your behaviour on this occasion. been feduced. is, in all respects, low and contemptible: for, rustian as you are, you durst not harbour one thought of executing your execrable scheme, while you knew my brother was near enough to prevent or revenge the infult; fo that you must not only be a treacherous villain, but a most despicable coward!' Having expressed herfelf in this manner, with a most majestick severity of aspect, she opened the door, and walking down stairs with furprizing resolution, committed herself to the care of a watchman, who accommodated her with a hackney chair, in which she was safely conveyed to her uncle's house.

Meanwhile, the lover was fo confounded and overawed by thefe cutting reproaches, and her animated behaviour, that all his resolution for sook him, and he found himself not only incapable of obstructing her retreat, but even of uttering one fyllable to deprecate her wrath, or extenuate the guilt of his own conduct. The nature of his disappointment, and the keen remorie that feized him, when he reflected upon the dishonourable footing on which his character flood with Emilia, raifed fuch perturbation in his mind, that his filence was fucceeded by a violent fit of distraction, during which he raved like a Bedlamite, and acted a thousand extravagances, which convinced the people of the house (a certain bagnio) that he had actually loft his wits. Pipes, with great concern, adopted the same opinion; and, being affifted by the waiters, hindered him, by main force, from running out and purfuing the fair fugitive; whom, in his delirium, he alternately curfed and commended, with horrid imprecations an lavish applause. His faithful valet, having waited two whole hours, in hope of feeing this gust of passion overblown, and perceiving that the paroxyim feemed rather to increase, very prudently sent for a physician of his master's acquaintance; who having confidered the circumstances and symptoms of the disorder, directed that he should be plentifully blooded, without loss of time, and prescribed tion of ems to nuch in , to ad-

ion

ig-

thy

iich

im,

pli-

ady

was

mit,

rith-

, he

obey

efire.

par-

inted

her

il re-

repe-

will

o en-

most

o de-

been

ngage

with-

uch a

or re-

preast,

icern-

aftity,

ntion.

espect,

ier the I have been preferibed a draught to compose the tumult of his spirits. These orders being punctually performed, he grew more calm and tractable; recovered his reflection so far, as to be assumed of the extasy he had undergone; suffered himself quietly to be undressed, and put to bed; where the fatigue occasioned by his exercise at the masquerade, co-operated with the present dissipation of his spirits to lull him into a prosound sleep, which greatly tended to the preservation of his intellects: not that he found himself in a state of perfect tranquillity, when he awaked about noon. The remembrance of what had passed overwhelmed him with mortification. Emilia's invectives still sounded in his ears: and while he deeply resented her dissain, he could not help admiring her spirit, and in his heart did homage to her charms.

CHAP. V. He endeavours to reconcile himself to his Mistress, and exposulates with the Uncle, who forbids him the House.

In this state of division, he went home to his own lodgings in a chair; and while he deliberated with himfelf whether he should relinquish the pursuit, and endeavour to banish her idea from his breast, or go immediately and humble himself before his exasperated misteres, and offer his hand as an atonement for his crime, his servant put in his hand a packet, which had been delivered by a ticket-porter at the door. He no sooner perceived that the superscription was in Emilia's handwriting, than he guessed the nature of the contents; and opening the seal with disordered eagerness, sound the jewels he had given to her, inclosed in a billet couched in these words—

'THAT I may have no cause to reproach myself with having retained the least memorial of a wretch whom I equally despite and abhor, I take this opportunity of restoring these in sfectual instruments of his infamous defign upon the honour of 'EMILIA.'

His chagrin was fo much galled and inflamed at the bitterness of this contemptuous message, that he gnawed ti

1

r

h

0

13

C

ti

le

n

e;

1:

ſ-

is

ly

he

he

ad

1's

oly

er

ind

m-

ea-

di-

nif-

me,

een

mer

nd-

and

the

hed

pach

of a

this

ients

t the

awed his

ė.

his fingers till the blood ran over his nails, and even wept with vexation. Sometimes he vowed revenge against her haughty virtue, and reviled himself for his precipitate declaration, before his scheme was brought to maturity; then he would confider her behaviour with reverence and regard, and bow before the irrefitible power of her attractions. In short, his breast was torn by conflicting paffions; love, fhame, and remorfe, contended with vanity, ambition, and revenge; and the superiority was still doubtful, when headstrong defire interposed, and decided in favour of an attempt towards a reconciliation with the offended fair.

Impelled by this motive, he fet out in the afternoon for the house of her uncle, not without hopes of that tender enjoyment which never fails to attend an accommodation betwixt two lovers of tafte and fenfibility. Though the consciousness of his trespass encumbered him with air of ankward confusion, he was too confident of his own qualifications and address to despair of forgiveness; and by that time he arrived at the citizen's gate, he had conned a very artful and pathetick harangue, which he proposed to utter in his own behalf, laying the blame of his conduct on the impetuofity of his passion, incensed by the Burgundy, which he had too liberally drank: but he did not meet with an opportunity to avail himself of this preparation. Emilia, fulpecting that he would take some step of this kind to retrieve her favour, had gone abroad on pretence of vifiting, after having fignified to her kinfman, her refolution to avoid the company of Peregrine, on account of some ambiguities which (she faid) were last night remarkable in his demeanour at the mafquerade. She chose to infinuate her suspicions in these hints, rather than give an explicit detail of the young man's dishonourable contrivance, which might have kindled the refentment of the family to some dangerous pitch of animofity and revenge.

Our adventurer, finding himself baffled in his expectation of feeing her, enquired for the old gentleman, with whom he thought he had influence enough to make his apology good, in case he should find him preposses by the young lady's information. But here too he was disappointed; the uncle had gone to dine in the country, and his wife was indisposed; so that he had no pretext for staying in the house till the return of his charmer. Being, however, fruitful of expedients, he dismissed his chariot, and took possession of a room in a tavern, the windows of which fronted the merchant's gate; and there he proposed to watch until he should see her approach. This scheme he put in practice with indefatigable patience, though it was not attended with the expected success.

Emilia, whose caution was equally vigilant and commendable, foreseeing that she might be exposed to the fertility of his invention, came home by a private pasfage, and entered by a postern, which was altogether unknown to her admirer; and her uncle did not arrive until it was so late that he could not with any decency demand a conference.

Next morning he did not fail to present himself at the door, and his mistress being denied by her own express direction, insisted upon seeing the master of the house; who received him with such coldness of civility, as plainly gave him to understand, that he was acquainted with the displeasure of his niece. He therefore, with an air of candour, teld the citizen, he could easily perceive, by his behaviour, that he was the consident of Miss Emily, of whom he was come to ask pardon for the offence he had given: and did not doubt, if he could be admitted to her presence, that he should be able to convince her, that he had not erred intentionally, or at least propose such reparation as would effectually atone for his fault.

To this remonstrance the merchant, without any ceremony or circumlocution, answered, that though he was ignorant of the nature of his offence, he was very certain, that it must have been something very flagrant that could irritate his niece to such a degree, against a perion

h

h

Di

2

Ic

ba

p

h

to

te

di

01

2

a person for whom she had formerly a most particular regard. He owned, the had declared her intention to renounce his acquaintance for ever, and, doubtlefs, the had good reason for so doing; neither would he undertake to promote an accommodation, unless he would give him full power to treat on the fcore of matrimony, which he supposed would be the only means of evincing his own fincerity, and obtaining Emilia's forgivenels. Peregrine's pride was kindled by the blunt declaration, which he could not help confidering as the refult of a scheme concerted betwixt the young lady and her uncle, in order to take the advantage of his heat. He therefore replied, with manifest figns of difguft, that he did not apprehend there was any occasion for a mediator to reconcile the difference betwixt Emiha and him; and that all he defired was an opportunity of pleading in his own behalf.

The citizen frankly told him, that as his niece had expressed an earnest desire of avoiding his company, he would not put the least constraint upon her inclination; and in the mean time gave him to krow, that he was particularly engaged.

le

e

of

s,

m

r-

he

C-

t-

n-

he

af-

er

ve

cy

the

eis

le;

as

ted

ith

er-

t of

for

he .

l be

ion-

Tec-

any

h he

very

rant

ainst

Our hero glowing with indignation at this fupercilious treatment; 'I was in the wrong,' faid he, 'to look for good-manners fo far on this fide of Templebar: but you must give me leave to tell you, Sir, that unless I am favoured with an interview with Miss Gauntlet, I shall conclude, that you have actually laid a constraint upon her inclination for some similer purposes of your own.'- 'Sir,' replied the old gentleman, 'you are welcome to make what conclusions shall feem good unto your own imagination; but, pray be fo good as to allow me the privilege of being mafter in my own house.' So faying, he very complaifantly shewed him to the door; and our lover being diffident of his own temper, as well as afraid of being used with greater indignity, in a place where his personal prowess would only ferve to heighten his difgrace, quitted the house in a transport of rage which he could not wholly suppress, telling the landlord, that if his age did not protect him, he would have chaftifed him for his infolent behaviour.

CHAP. VI.

He projects a violent Scheme, in Consequence of which he is involved in a most fatiguing Adventure, which greatly tends towards the Augmentation of his Cha-

THUS debarred of personal communication with his mistress, he essayed to retrieve her good graces by the most submissive and pathetick letters, which he conveyed by divers artifices to her perufal; but reaping no manner of benefit from these endeavours, his passion acquired a degree of impatience, little inferior to downright frenzy; and he determined to run every risk of life, fortune, and reputation, rather than defift from his unjustifiable pursuit. Indeed, his refentment was now as deeply concerned as his love, and each of these passions equally turbulent and loud in demanding gratification. He kept centinels continually in pay, to give him notice of her outgoings, in expectation of finding some opportunity to carry her off; but her circumspection entirely frustrated his design; for the suspected every thing of that fort from a disposition like his, and regulated her motions accordingly.

Baffled by her prudence and penetration, he altered his plan. On pretence of being called to his country-house by some affair of importance, he departed from London, and taking lodgings at a farmer's house, that stood near the road through which she must have necessarily passed, in her return to her mother, concealed himself from all intercourse, except with his valet de chambre and Pipes, who had orders to scour the country, and reconnoitre every horse, coach, or carriage, that should appear on that highway, with a view of intercepting his Amanda in her passage.

He had waited in this ambuscade a whole week, when his valet gave him notice, that he and his fellow-scout had discovered a chaife and fix, driving at full speed towards them; upon which, they had flapped

their

ь

af

lo

on

their hats over their eyes, so as that they might not be known, in case they should be seen, and concealed themselves behind a hedge, from whence they could perceive in the carriage, as it passed, a young man plainly dressed, with a lady in a mask, of the exact size, shape, and air of Emilia; and that Pipes followed them at a distance, while he rode back to communicate this piece of intelligence.

Peregrine would fcarce allow him time to conclude his information; he ran down to the stable, where his horse was kept ready saddled for the purpose, and never doubting that the lady in question was his mistress, attended by one of her uncle's clerks, mounted immediately, and rode full gallop after the chaife, which, when he had proceeded about two miles, he understood from Pipes had put up at a neighbouring inn. Though his inclination prompted him to enter her apartment without farther delay, he fuffered himself to be diffuaded from taking such a precipitate step, by his privy counsellor, who observed, that it would be impracticable to execute his purpose of conveying her against her will from a publick inn, that stood in the midst of a populous village, which would infallibly rife in her defence. He advised him, therefore, to lie in wait for the chaife, in some remote and private part of the road, where they might accomplish their aim without difficulty or danger. In confequence of this admonition, our adventurer ordered Pipes to reconnoitre the inn, that the might not escape another way, while he and the valet, in order to avoid being feen, took a circuit by an unfrequented path, and placed themselves in ambush, on a spot which they chose for the scene of their atchievement. Here they tarried a full hour, without fleing the carriage, or hearing from their centinel: fo that the youth, unable to exert his patience one moment longer, left the foreigner in his station, and rode back to his faithful lacquey, who affured him, that the travellers had not yet hove up their anchor, or proceeded on their voyage.

coniping affion ownf life, is un-

im,

our.

bich

bich

Cha-

n his

ow as affions ation. m nofome ection every regu-altered untryfrom e, that necefnecealed alet de counrriage, of in-week, fellowat full flapped their

Notwithstanding this intimation, Pickle began to entertain fuch alarming fuspicions, that he could not refrain from advancing to the gate, and enquiring for the company which had lately arrived in a chaife and The inn-keeper, who was not at all pleafed with the behaviour of those passengers, did not think proper to observe the instructions he had received; on the contrary, he plainly told him, that the chaife did not halt, but only entered at one door, and went out at the other, with a view to deceive those who pursued it, as he gueffed from the words of the gentleman, who had earnestly defired, that his rout might be concealed from any person who should enquire about their motions. " As for my own peart, measter,' continued this charitable publican, 'I believe as how they are no better than they should be, else they wouldn't be in such a deadly fear of being overtaken. " Methinks," faid I, when I faw them in fuch a woundy pother to be gone, " oddfheartikins! this must be fome London prentice running away with his meafter's daughter, as fure as I am a living foul." But, be he who he will, fartain it is, a has nothing of the gentleman about en; for, thof a axed fuch a favour, a never once put hand in pocket, or faid, "Dog, will you drink?" Howfomever, that don't argufy in reverence of his being in a hurry; and a man may be fometimes a little too judgmatical in his conjectures.' In all probability, this loquacious landlord would have ferved the traveller effectually, had Peregrine heard him to an end; but this impetuous youth, far from liftening to the fequel of his observations, interrupted him in the beginning of his career, by asking eagerly, which road they followed; and having received the inn-keeper's direction, clapped spurs to his horse, commanding Pipes to make the valet acquainted with his course, that they might attend him with all imaginary dispatch.

By the publican's account of their conduct, his former opinion was fully confirmed; he plied the freed to the height of his mettle, and so much was his imaginati

po

ha

fo

W

do

up

pr

an wi

ter

the

cro

car

ral

flip

ph

for

and

dif

ped

thi

dif

He

not

wit

he

gai

ed

cor

tion ingroffed by the prospect of having Emilia in his power, that he did not perceive the road on which he travelled was quite different from that which led to the habitation of Mrs. Gauntlet. The valet de chambre was an utter stranger to that part of the country; and as for Mr. Pipes, fuch confiderations were altogether foreigh to the occonomy of his reflection.

Ten long miles had our hero rode, when his eyes were bleffed with the fight of the chaife afcending a hill, at the distance of a good league; upon which he doubled his diligence in fuch a manner, that he gained upon the carriage every minute, and at length approached fo near to it, that he could differ the lady and her conductor, with their heads thrust out at the windows, looking back, and speaking to the driver alternately, as if they earnestly befought him to augment the speed of his cattle.

to 20

OI.

nd

th

er

he

ot

he

as

ad

nı

is.

a-

et-cla

id

be

OI

as

ill.

n;

ind

W-

ill

00 ty,

rel-

but

uel

ing

fol-

ec-

s to

hey

for-

1 to

ina-

on

Being thus, as it were, in fight of port, while he croffed the road, his horse happened to plunge into a cart-rut with fuch violence, that he was thrown feveral yards over his head; and the beaft's shoulder being flipped by the fall, he found himself disabled from plucking the fruit, which was almost within his reach; for he had left his fervants at a confiderable diffance behind him; and although they had been at his back, and supplied him with another horse, they were so indifferently mounted, that he could not reasonably expect to overtake the flyers, who profited fo much by this difaster, that the chaise vanished in a moment.

It may be eafily conceived, how a young man of his disposition passed his time in this tantalizing situation. He ejaculated with great fervency, but his prayers were not the effects of refignation. He ran back on foot with incredible speed, in order to meet his valet, whom he unhorfed in a twinkling; and, taking his feat, began to exercise his whip and spurs, after having ordered the Swifs to follow him on the other gelding, and committed the lame hunter to the care of Pipes.

Matters being adjusted in this manner, our adven-VOL. III. turer

turer profecuted the race with all his might; and hav. ing made fome progress, was informed by a country. man, that the chaife had struck off into another road, and, according to his judgment, was by that time about three miles a-head; though, in all probability, the horses would not be able to hold out much longer, because they seemed to be quite spent when they passed his door. Encouraged by this intimation, Peregrine pushed on with great alacrity; though he could not regain fight of the defired object, till the clouds of night began to deepen, and even then he enjoyed nothing more than a transient glimpse; for the carriage was no fooner feen, than shrouded again from his view. These vexatious circumstances animated his endeayours, while they irritated his chagrin: in fhort, he continued his purfuit till the night was far advanced, and himself so uncertain about the object of his care, that he entered a folitary inn, with a view of obtaining fome intelligence, when, to his infinite joy, he perceived the chaife franding by itself, and the horses panting in the yard. In full confidence of his having arrived at last at the goal of all his wishes, he alighted instantaneously, and running up to the coachman, with a piftol in his hand, commanded him, in an imperious tone, to conduct him to the lady's chamber, on pain of death. The driver, affrighted at this menacing address, protested with great humility, that he did not know whither his fare had retired; for that he himself was paid and difmiffed from this fervice, because he would not undertake to drive them all night across the country, without stopping to refresh his horses; but he promised to go in quest of the waiter, who would shew him to their apartment. He was accordingly detached on that errand, while our hero stood centinel at the gate, till the arrival of his valet de chambre, who joining him by accident, before the coachman returned, relieved him in his watch; and then the young gentleman, exasperated at his messenger's delay, rushed with fury in his eyes from room to room, denouncing vengeance

in

hi

th

in

th

in

W

ft:

fu

pi

u

ar

be

th

W

CO

hi

ro

hav-

ntry-

road,

time

ility,

nger,

paffed

grine

d not

ids of

l no-

riage

view.

ndea-

rt, he

inced.

care,

aining

rceiv-

anting

rrived inftan-

a pif-

s tone,

death.

, pro-

v whi-

as paid

ld not

untry,

e pro-

d fhew

tached

at the no join-

urned,

gentle-

ed with

ng ven-

geance upon the whole family; but he did not meet with one living foul, until he entered the garret, where he found the landlord and his wife in bed. This chicken-hearted couple, by the light of a rufh-candle hat burned on the hearth, feeing a stranger burst into the chamber, in such a terrible attitude, were seized with consternation; and exalting their voices, in a most lamentable strain, begged for the passion of Christ, that he would spare their lives, and take all they had.

Peregrine guessing from this exclamation, and the circumstance of their being a-bed, that they mistook him for a robber, and were ignorant of that which he wanted to know, dispelled their terror, by making them acquainted with the cause of his visit, and desired the husband to get up with all possible dispatch, in order to affift and attend him in his fearch.

Thus reinforced, he rummaged every corner of the inn, and at last finding the hostler in the stable, was by him informed, (to his unspeakable mortification) that the gentleman and lady who arrived in the chaife, had immediately hired post-horses for a certain village at the distance of fifteen miles, and departed without halting for the least refreshment. Our adventurer, mad with his disappointment, mounted his horse in an instant, and, with his attendant, took the same road, with full determination to die, rather than defift from the profecution of his defign. He had, by this time, rode upwards of thirty miles fince three o'clock in the afternoon; fo that the horses were almost quite jaded, and travelled this stage so slowly, that it was morning before they reached the place of their destination, where, far from finding the fugitives, he understood, that no fuch persons as he described had passed that. way, and that in all likelihood they had taken a quite contrary direction, while, in order to mislead him in his pursuit, they had amused the hostler with a false route. This conjecture was strengthened by his perceiving, (now, for the first time) that he had deviated a confiderable way from the road, through which they must have journeyed, in order to arrive at the place of her mother's refidence; and thefe fuggestions utterly deprived him of the finall remains of recollection, which he had hitherto retained. His eyes rolled about, witnesling rage and distraction; he foamed at the mouth, stamped upon the ground with great violence, uttered incoherent imprecations against himself and all mankind, and would have fallied forth again he knew not whither, upon the same horse, which he had already almost killed with fatigue, had not his confident found means to quiet the tumult of his thoughts, and recal his reflection, by representing the condition of the poor animals, and advising him to hire fresh horses, and ride post across the country, to the village in the neighbourhood of Mrs. Gauntlet's habitation, where they should infallibly intercept the daughter, provided they could get the flart of her upon the road.

D 2.

Peregrine not only relished, but forthwith acted in conformity with this good counsel. His own horses were committed to the charge of the landlord, with directions for Pipes, in case he should come in quest of his master; and a couple of stout geldings being prepared, he and his valet took the road again, steering their course according to the motions of the post-boy, who undertook to be their guide. They had almost sinished the first stage, when they they described a post-chaise just halting at the inn where they proposed to change horses; upon which our adventurer, glowing with a most interesting presage, put his beast to the full speed, and approached near enough to distinguish, as the travellers quitted the carriage, that he had at last come up with the very individual persons whom he had purfued fo long.

Flushed with this discovery, he galloped into the yard so suddenly, that the lady and her conductor scarce had time to shut themselves up in a chamber, to which they retreated with great precipitation; so that the pursuer was now certain of having housed his prey. That he might, however, leave nothing to fortune, he placed

ft

t

v

C

h

b

e

e of

erly

ion,

out,

the

ence,

d all

new

eady

ound recal

poor

ride

our-

bluor

could

ed in orfes

h di-

eft of

pre-

ering

-boy,

lmost post-

ed to

wing

e full

h, as

at last

e had

o the

fcarce

which

t the

prey.

ne, he

laced

blaced himself upon the stair, by which they had ascended to the apartment, and fent up his compliments to the young lady, defiring the favour of being admitted to her presence, otherwise he should be obliged to wave all ceremony, and take that liberty which she would The fervant having conveyed his message not give. through the key-hole, returned with an answer, importing, that she would adhere to the resolution she had taken, and perish rather than comply with his will. Our adventurer, without flaying to make any rejoinder to this reply, ran up frairs, and thundering at the door for entrance, was given to understand by the nymph's attendant, that he would do well to spare him the neceffity of fhedding blood, in defence of a person who had put herself under his protection. 'All the laws of the land,' faid he, ' cannot now untie the knots by which we are bound together; and therefore I will guard her as my own property; fo that you had better defift from your fruitless attempt, and thereby consult your own fafety: for, by the God that made me! I will discharge my piece upon you, as soon as you set your nose within the door; and your blood be upon your own head.' These menaces from a citizen's clerk would have been sufficient motives for Pickle to fform the breach, although they had not been reinforced by that declaration, which informed him of Emilia's having bestowed herfelf in marriage upon such a contemptible rival. This fole confideration added wings to his impetuofity, and he applied his foot to the door with fuch irrefiftible force, as burfted it open in an inftant, entering at the same time with a pistol ready cocked in his hand. His antagonist, instead of firing his blunderbufs, when he faw him approach, started back with evident figns of furprize and confernation, exclaiming, 'Lord Jefus! Sir, you are not the man! and, without doubt, are under some mistake with regard to us.'

Before Peregrine had time to answer this falutation, the lady hearing it, advanced to him, and pulling off a mask, discovered a face which he had never seen before. The Gorgon's head, according to the fables of antiquity, never had a more inftantaneous or petrifying effect, than that which this countenance produced in the aftonished youth. His eyes were fixed upon this unknown object, as if they had been attracted by the power of enchantment; his feet feemed rivetted to the ground; and after having flood motionless for the space of a few minutes, he dropped down in an apoplexy of disappointment and despair. The Swifs, who had folfowed him, feeing his mafter in this condition, lifted him up, and laying him upon a bed in the next room, let him blood immediately, without hefitation, being always provided with a case of lancets, against all accidents on the road. To this forefight our hero, in all probability, was indebted for his life. By virtue of a very copious evacuation, he recovered the use of his fenses; but the complication of fatigues, and violent transports which he had undergone, brewed up a dangerous fever in his blood; and a physician being called from the next market-town, feveral days elapfed before he would answer for his life.

CHAP. VII.

Peregrine fends a Message to Mrs. Gauntlet, who rejects his Proposal. He repairs to the Garrison.

T length, however, his constitution overcame his disease, though not before it had in a greater meafure tamed the fury of his disposition, and brought him to a ferious confideration of his conduct. In this humiliation of his spirits, he reflected with shame and remorfe upon his treachery to the fair, the innocent Emilia; he remembered his former fentiments in her favour, as well as the injunctions of his dying uncle; he recollected his intimacy with her brother, against which he had fo basely sinned; and revolving all the circumstances of her conduct, found it so commendable, spirited, and noble, that he deemed her an object of fufficient dignity to merit his honourable addresses, even though his duty had not been concerned in the decifion :

fion: but, obligated as he was, to make reparation to a worthy family, which he had fo grossly injured, he thought he could not manifest his reformation too foon; and, whenever he found himself able to hold a pen, wrote a letter to Mrs. Gauntlet, wherein he acknowledged, with many expressions of forrow and contrition, that he had acted a part altogether unbecoming a man of honour, and fhould never enjoy the least tranquillity of mind, until he should have merited her forgiveness. He protested, that although his happiness entirely depended upon the determination of Emilia, he would even renounce all hopes of being bleffed with her favour, if the could point out any other method of making reparation to that amiable young lady, but by laying his heart and fortune at her feet, and fubmitting himself to her pleasure during the remaining part of his life. He conjured her, therefore, in the most pathetick manner, to pardon him, in confideration of his fincere repentance, and to use her maternal influence with her daughter, fo as that he might be permitted to wait upon her with a wedding-ring, as foon as his health would allow him to undertake the journey.

This explanation being dispatched by Pipes, who had by this time found his mafter, the young gentleman enquired about the couple whom he had fo unfortunately purfued, and understood from his valet de chambre, who learned the ftory from their own mouths, that the lady was the only daughter of a rich Jew, and her attendant no other than his apprentice, who had converted her to Christianity, and married her at the fame time; that this fecret having taken air, the old Israelite had contrived a scheme to separate them for ever; and they being apprized of his intention, had found means to elope from his house, with a view of sheltering themselves in France, until the affair could be made up; that feeing three men ride after them with fuch eagerness and speed, they never doubted that the purfuers were her father, and some friends or domesticks, and on that supposition had fled with the utmost

difpatch

2. ne his meat him

efore.

anti-

g ef-

n the

s un-

v the

o the

fpace

xy of

d fol-

lifted

oom.

being

acci-

in all

e of a

f his

iolent

dan-

called before

bo re-

is hund re-Emiavour, he rewhich rcume, fpi-fuffi-

, even

deci-

fion :

dispatch and trepidation, until they had found themfelves happily undeceived, at that very instant when they expected nothing but mischief and missortune; laftly, the Swifs gave him to understand, that having professed some concern for his deplorable situation, and enjoyed a flight refreshment, they had taken their departure for Dover, and in all likelihood were fafely arrived at Paris.

In four and twenty hours after Pipes was charged with his commission, he brought back an answer from the mother of Emilia, couched in these words.

SIR,

'I RECEIVED the favour of yours, and am glad, for your own fake, that you have attained a due fense and conviction of your unkind and unchristian behaviour to poor Emy. I thank God, none of ' my children were ever so insulted before. Give me e leave to tell you, Sir, my daughter was no upstart without friends or education, but a young lady as well bred, and better born, than most private gentlewomen in the kingdom: and therefore, though you had no efteem for her person, you ought to have paid fome regard to her family, which (no disparagement 6 to you, Sir) is more honourable than your own. As for your proposal, Miss Gauntlet will not hear of it, 6 being that the thinks her honour will not allow her to e listen to any terms of reconciliation; and she is not vet so destitute, as to embrace an offer to which she has the least objection. In the mean time, she is so ' much indisposed, that she cannot possibly see company; ' fo I beg you will not take the trouble of making a fruitless journey to this place. Perhaps your future conduct may deferve her forgiveness; and really, as I am concerned for your happiness, which you as-' fure me depends upon her condescension, I wish with ' all my heart it may; and am, notwithstanding all that has happened, your fincere well-wisher, " CECILIA GAUNTLET."

From

From this epiftle, and the information of his messen, our hero learned, that his mistress had actually proted by his wild-goose chace, so as to make a safe reteat to her mother's house. Though forry to hear of er indisposition, he was also piqued at her implacability, as well as at some stately paragraphs of the letter, in which (he thought) the good lady had consulted her wild vanity rather than her good sense. These motives of resentment helped him to bear his disappointment ike a philosopher, especially as he had now quieted his onscience, in proffering to redress the injury he had one; and, moreover, found himself, with regard to its love, in a calm state of hope and resignation,

A feasonable fit of illness is an excellent medicine for he turbulence of passion. Such a reformation had the ever produced in the occonomy of his thoughts, that e moralized like an apostle, and projected several prudential schemes for his future conduct.

In the mean time, as foon as his health was fuffiiently re-established, he took a trip to the garrison, in order to visit his friends; and learned from Hatchway's wn mouth, that he had broke the ice of courtship to is aunt, and that his addresses were now fairly assort; hough when he first declared himself to the widow, ster she had been duly prepared for the occasion by her nicce and the rest of her friends, she had received his proposal with a becoming reserve, and piously wept at the remembrance of her husband, observing, that she hould never meet with his fellow.

Peregrine promoted the lieutenant's fuit with all his affuence; and all Mrs. Trunnion's objections to the match being furmounted, it was determined that the lay of marriage should be put off for three months, that her reputation might not suffer by a precipitate magagement. His next care was to give orders for recting a plain marble monument to the memory of this uncle, on which the following inscription, composed by the bridegroom, actually appeared in golden letters.

LET.

them.

when

tune:

aving

1, and

ir de-

ly ar-

arged

from

, and

ined a

chrif-

one of

ve me

pftart

ady as

rentle-

h you

e paid

ement

of it,

her to

is not

ich she

e is fo

ipany;

naking

ur fu-

really,

ou af-

h with ll that

As

Here lies,
Foundered in a fathom and half,
The shell
Of

Hawser Trunnion, Efq.
Formerly commander of a squadron
In his majesty's service, Who broach'd to, at five P.M. Oct. X.
In the year of his age Threescore and nineteen.

He kept his guns always loaded, And his tackle ready manned, And never shewed his poop to the enemy, Except when he took her in tow; But, his shot being expended. His match burnt out, And his upper-works decayed, He was funk By Death's superior weight of metal. Nevertheless, He will be weighed again At the Great Day, His rigging refitted, And his timbers repaired; And, with one broad-fide, Make his adversary Strike in his turn.

CHAP. VIII.

He returns to London, and meets with Cadwallader, who entertains him with many curious Particulars. Crabtree founds the Duchefs, and undeceives Pickle; who, by an extraordinary Accident, becomes acquainted with another Lady of Quality.

THE young gentleman having performed these last offices, in honour of his deceased benefactor, and presented Mr. Jolter to the long expected living, which at this time happened to be vacant, returned to London, and resumed his former gaiety: not that he was able to shake Emilia from his thought, or even to remember her without violent emotions; for, as he recovered

overed his vigour, his former impatience recurred; and herefore he resolved to plunge himself headlong into ome intrigue, that might engage his passions, and muse his imagination.

A man of his accomplishments could not fail to neet with a variety of subjects, on which his gallantry rould have been properly exercifed; and this abunance distracted his choice, which at any time was apt o be influenced by caprice and whim. I have already bserved, that he had lifted his view, through a matrinonial perspective, as high a lady of the first quality and distinction; and, now that he was refused by Miss Gauntlet, and enjoyed a little respite from the agonies of that flame which her charms had kindled in his heart, he renewed his affiduities to her grace. Though he durst not yet risk an explanation, he enjoyed the pleasure of seeing himself so well received in quality of particular acquaintance, that he flattered himself with the belief of his having made fome progress in her heart; and was confirmed in this conceited notion, by the affurances of her woman, whom by liberal largeffes he retained in his interest, because she found means to perfuade him, that she was in the confidence of her lady. But, notwithstanding this encouragement, and the fanguine fuggestions of his own vanity, he dreaded the thoughts of exposing himself to her ridicule and refentment by a premature declaration, and determined to postpone his addresses, until he should be more cer tified of the probability of fucceeding in his attempt.

While he remained in this hesitation and suspense, he was one morning very agreeably surprized with the appearance of his friend Crabtree; who, by the permission of Pipes, to whom he was well known, entered his chamber before he was awake, and, by a violent shake of the shoulder, disengaged him from the arms of sleep. The first compliments having mutually passed, Cadwallader gave him to understand, that he had arrived in town over night in the stage-coach from Bath, and entertained him with such a sudicrous account of llader, culars. Pickle; quaintefe laft or, and which o Lonhe was n to res he reovered his fellow-travellers, that Peregrine, for the first time fince their parting, indulged himself in mirth, even to the hazard of suffocation.

Crabtree having rehearfed these adventures, in such a peculiarity of manner, as added infinite ridicule to every circumstance, and repeated every scandalous report which had circulated at the Bath after Peregrine's departure, was informed by the youth, that he harboured a design upon the person of such a duches, and all in appearance had no reason to complain of his reception; but, that he would not venture to declare himself, until he should be more ascertained of her sentiments: and therefore, he begged leave to depend upon the intelligence of his friend Cadwallader, who, he knew, was admitted to her parties.

The mifanthrope, before he would promife his affistance, asked if his prospect verged towards matrimony; and our adventurer (who gueffed the meaning of his question) replying in the negative, he undertook the office of reconnoitring her inclination; protefting at the same time, that he would never concern himself in any scheme that did not tend to the disgrace and deception of all the fex. On these conditions, he espoused the interest of our hero; and a plan was immediately concerted, in confequence of which they met by accident at her grace's table. Pickle having stayed all the fore-part of the evening, and fat out all the company, except the mifanthrope and a certain widow lady, who was faid to be in the fecrets of my lady duchefs, went away on pretence of an indifpensable engagement, that Crabtree might have a proper opportunity of making him the subject of conversation.

Accordingly, he had scarce quitted the apartment, when this cynic attended him to the door, with a look of morose disdain.— Were I an absolute prince, said he, and that fellow one of my subjects, I would order him to be cloathed in sack-cloth, and he should drive my affes to water, that his losty spirit might be lowered to the level of his deserts. The pride of a peacock

is

is

ni

bu

tal

wi

in Bu

his

am

no

it i

pro

tica

lap

in e bru

par

ent

wh

and

mag

don

mea

ever ther

com

the

dref

couri

you

way

tem

the dion

thefe

mall

V

is downright felf-denial, when compared with the vanity of that coxcomb, which was naturally arrogant, but is now rendered altogether intolerable, by the reputation he acquired at Bath, for kicking a bully, outwitting a club of raw sharpers, and divers other pranks, in the execution of which he was more lucky than wife. But nothing has contributed so much to the increase of his infolence and felf-conceit, as the favour he found among the ladies. Aye, the ladies, Madam! I care not who knows it: the ladies, who (to their honour be it spoken) never fail to patronize soppery and folly, provided they folicit their encouragement. And yet this dog was not on the footing of those hermaphroditical animals, who may be reckoned among the number of waiting-women, who air your shifts, comb your lap-dogs, examine your nofes with magnifying glaffes in order to fqueeze out the worms, clean your teethbrushes, sweeten your handkerchiefs, and soften wastepaper for your occasions. This fellow, Pickle, was entertained for more important purpoles; his turn of duty never came till those lapwings were gone to rooft; when he scaled windows, leaped over gerden-walls. and was let in by Mrs. Betty in the dark. Nay, the magistrates of Bath complimented him with the freedom of the corporation, merely because, through his means, the waters had gained extraordinary credit; for every female of a tolerable appearance, that went thither on account of her sterility, got the better of her complaint, during his refidence at the Bath: and now. the fellow thinks no woman can withstand his addreffes. He had not been here three minutes, when I could perceive with half an eye that he had marked out your grace for a conquest; I mean, in an honourable way; though the rateal has impudence enough to attempt any thing.' So faying, he fixed his eyes upon the duchefs, who (while her face glowed with indignation) turning to her confidante, expressed herself in hefe words. 'Upon my life! I believe there is acmally fome truth in what this old ruffian fays; I have VOL. III.

to

to rene's narand

ntipon he

af-

took fting mfelf deouted acciil the any, who went that king

nent, look faid order drive

acock

16

myself observed that young fellow eyeing me with very particular stare.'—' It is not to be at all wondered at,' faid her friend, 'that a youth of his complexion should be fensible to the charms of your grace! but I dare fay, he would not prefume to entertain any but the most honourable and respectful sentiments.'—' Re. spectful sentiments!' cried my lady, with a look of ineffable disdain; 'if I thought the fellow had assurance enough to think of me in any fliape, I protest I would forbid him my house. Upon my honour, such instances of audacity should induce persons of quality to keep your small gentry at a greater distance; for they are very apt to grow impudent upon the least countenance or encouragement.'

Cadwallader, fatisfied with this declaration, changed the subject of discourse, and next day communicated his discovery to his friend Pickle; who, upon this occasion, felt the most stinging sensations of mortified pride, and resolved to quit his prospect with a good grace. Nor did the execution of this felf-denying scheme cost him one moment's uneafiness; for his heart had never been interested in the pursuit, and his vanity triumphed in the thoughts of manifesting his indifference. Accordingly, the very next time he visited her grace, his behaviour was remarkably frank, sprightly, and difengaged; and the fubject of love being artfully introduced by the widow, who had been directed to found his inclinations, he rallied the passion with great eafe and feverity, and made no fcruple of declaring himself heart-whole.

Though the duchefs had refented his supposed affect tion, she was now offended at his infensibility, and ever fignified her difgust, by observing, that perhaps his at tention to his own qualifications screened him from the impression of all other objects.

While he enjoyed this farcasm, the meaning of which he could plainly differn, the company was joined by certain virtuoso, who had gained free access to all the great families of the land, by his notable talent of gold wre

fipping

C:

to

br ve

ble

in

gre

we

qu

oir not

adı

in:

thi

tur for

Hift of t

vor

pan

ppp

of a

bje ive

leri lau

on

une

nflu vhi

lifo fv

vife reno

V

hpping and buffoonery. He was now in the feventyfifth year of his age; his birth was so obscure, that he carce knew his father's name; his education fuitable to the dignity of his descent; his character publickly branded with homicide, profligacy, and breach of truft; vet this man, by the happy inheritance of impregnable effrontery, and a lucky profitution of all principle in rendering himself subservient to the appetites of the great, had attained to an independency of fortune, as well as to fuch a particular share of favour among the quality, that although he was well known to have bimped for three generations of the nobility, there was not a lady of fashion in the kingdom who scrupled to admit him to her toilette, or even to be squired by him in any publick place of entertainment. Not but that this fage was occasionally useful to his fellow-creatures, by these connections with people of fortune; for, he often undertook to folicit charity in behalf of distressed objects, with a view of embezzling one half of the benefactions. It was an errand of this kind that now brought him to the house of her grace.

After having fat a few minutes, he told the company, that he would favour them with a very proper opportunity to extend their benevolence, for the relief of a poor gentlewoman, who was reduced to the most bject misery, by the death of her husband, and just deivered of a couple of fine boys. They, moreover, unlerstood from his information, that this object was laughter of a good family, who had renounced her, in consequence of her marrying an enfign without a forune; and even obstructed his promotion with all their nfluence and power; a circumstance of barbarity, which had made fuch an impression upon his mind, as isordered his brain, and drove him to despair, in a fit If which he had made away with himself, leaving his of which vife, then big with child, to all the horrors of indigence and grief. Various were the criticisms on this pathetick pict of gold ure, which the old man drew with great expression.

ned by o all th fipping ty to they unteinged cated

h a

ler-

cion

nt I

but Re.

f in-

ance

bluo

in-

rtified good nying heart vanity is oc-

differ. ed her ightly, rtfully Sted to h great claring

d affec nd ever his at rom the My lady duchess concluded, that she must be a creature void of all feeling and reflection, who could furvive fuch aggravated mifery; therefore, did not deferve to be relieved, except in the character of a common beggar; and was generous enough to offer a recommendation, by which she would be admitted into an infirmary, to which her grace was a subscriber; at the fame time, advising the solicitor to fend the twins to the Foundling Hospital, where they would be carefully nurfed and brought up, so as to become useful members to the commonwealth. Another lady, with all due deference to the opinion of the duchefs, was free enough to blame the generofity of her grace, which would only ferve to encourage children in their disobedience to their parents, and might be the means not only of prolonging the diffress of the wretched creature, but also of ruining the constitution of some young heir, perhaps the hope of a great family! for the did suppose that Madam, when her month should be up, and her brats disposed of, would spread her attractions to the publick, (provided fhe could profit by her person) and, in the usual way, make a regular progress from St. James's to Drury Lane. She apprehended, for these reasons, that their compassion would be most effectually fhewn, in leaving her to perish in her present necessity: and that the old gentleman would be unpardonable, should he persist in his endeavours to relieve her. third member of this tender-hearted fociety, after having asked if the young woman was handsome, and been answered in the negative, allowed that there was a great deal of reason in what had been said by the honourable person who spoke last; nevertheless, she humbly conceived her fentence would admit of some mitigation. Let the bantlings,' faid she, ' be fent to the hospital, according to the advice of her grace, and a small collection be made for the present support of the mother; and when her health is recovered, I will take her into my family, in quality of an upper servant, or medium between me and my woman; for, upon my life, I can't endure endure to chide, or give directions to a creature, who is, in point of birth and education, but one degree above the vulgar.'

This proposal met with univerfal approbation. The duchefs (to her immortal honour) began the contribution with a crown; fo that the rest of the company were obliged to restrict their liberality to half the sum, that her grace might not be affronted; and the proposer demanding the poor woman's name and place of abode, the old mediator could not help giving her ladyship a verbal direction, though he was extremely mortified (on more accounts than one) to find such an issue to his solicitation.

Peregrine, who, though humorous as winter, had a tear for pity, and an hand open as day for melting charity, was shocked at the nature and result of this ungenerous consultation. He contributed his half crown, however; and retiring from the company, betook himfelf to the lodgings of the forlorn lady in the straw, according to the direction he had heard. Upon enquiry, he understood, that she was then visited by some charitable gentlewoman, who had sent for a nurse, and waited the return of the messenger; and he sent up his respects, desiring he might be permitted to see her, on pretence of having been intimate with her late husband.

Though the poor woman had never heard of his name, she did not think proper to deny his request; and he was conducted to a paltry chamber in the third story, where he found this unhappy widow sitting upon a truckle-bed, and suckling one of her infants with the most piteous expression of anguish in her features, which were naturally regular and sweet; while the other was fondled on the knee of a person, whose attention was so much engrossed by her little charge, that for the present she could mind nothing else; and it was not till after the first compliments passed betwixt the hapless mother and our adventurer, that he perceived the stranger's countenance, which inspired him with the highest esteem and admiration. He beheld all the graces of elegance and beauty, breathing fentiment and beneficence, and foftened into the most enchanting tendernels of weeping fympathy. When he declared the cause of his visit, which was no other than the defire of befriending the diffressed lady, to whom he presented a bank-note for twenty pounds, he was favoured with fuch a look of complacency by this amiable phantom, who might have been justly taken for an angel miniftering to the necessities of mortals, that his whole foul was transported with love and veneration. Nor was this prepoffession diminished by the information of the widow; who, after having manifested her gratitude in a flood of tears, told him, that the unknown object of his efteem was a person of honour, who having heard by accident of her deplorable fituation, had immediately obeyed the dictates of her humanity, and come in perfon to relieve her diffress; that she had not only generoufly fupplied her with money for her present suftenance, but also undertaken to provide a nurse for her babes, and even promifed to favour her with protection, should she survive her present melancholy situation. To these articles of intelligence she added, that the name of her benefactress was the celebrated Lady , to whose character the youth was no stranger, though he had never feen her person before. The killing edge of her charms was a little blunted by the accidents of time and fortune; but no man of tafte and magination, whose nerves were not quite chilled with the frost of age, could even at that time look upon her with impunity. And as Peregrine faw her attractions heightened by the tender office in which the was engaged, he was fmitten with her beauty, and fo ravished with her compassion, that he could not suppress his emotions, but applauded her benevolence with all the warmth of enthuliaim.

Her ladyship received his compliments with great politeness and affability. And the occasion on which they met being equally interesting to both, an acquaintance commenced between them, and they concerted measures

measures for the benefit of the widow and her two children, one of whom our hero bespoke for his own godson; for Pickle was not so obscure in the beau monde, but that his same had reached the ears of this lady, who, therefore, did not discourage his advances towards her friendship and esteem.

All the particulars relating to their charge being adjusted, he attended her ladyship to her own house; and, by her conversation, had the pleasure of finding her understanding suitable to her other accomplishments. Nor had she any reason to think, that our hero's qualifications had been exaggerated by common report.

One of their adopted children died before it was baptized; fo that their care concentered in the other, for whom they stood sponsors. Understanding that the old agent was become troublesome in his visits to the mother, to whom he now began to administer such counsel as shocked the delicacy of her virtue, they removed her into another lodging, where she would not be exposed to his machinations. In less than a month, our hero learned from a nobleman of his acquaintance, that the hoary pandar had actually engaged to procure for him this poor afflicted gentlewoman; and being frustrated in his intention, substituted in her room a nymph from the purlieus of Covent Garden, that made his lordship smart severely for the savours she bestowed.

Meanwhile, Peregrine cultivated his new acquaintance with all his art and affiduity, prefuming, from the circumstances of her reputation and fate, as well as on the strength of his own merit, that, in time, he should be able to indulge that passion which had begun to glow within his breaft.

As her ladyship had undergone a vast variety of fertune and adventure, which he had heard indistinctly related, with numberless errors and misrepresentations, he was no sooner entitled, by the familiarity of communication, to ask such a favour, than he earnestly entreated her to entertain him with the particulars of her story; and, by dint of importunity, she was at length prevailed

prevailed upon (in a felect partie) to gratify his curiofity in these words.

CHAP. IX.

The Memoirs of a Lady of Quality.

BY the circumstances of the story which I am going to relate, you will be convinced of my candour, while you are informed of my indiscretion: you will be enabled, I hope, to perceive, that howsoever my head may have erred, my heart hath always been uncorrupted, and that I have been unhappy, because I loved, and was a swoman.

'I believe I need not observe, that I was the only child of a man of good fortune, who indulged me in my infancy, with all the tenderness of paternal affection; and when I was fix years old, sent me to a private school, where I stayed till my age was doubled, and became such a favourite, that I was (even in those early days) carried to all the places of publick diversion, the court itself not excepted; an indulgence that slattered my love of pleasure, to which I was naturally addicted, and encouraged those ideas of vanity and ambition which spring up so early in the human mind,

I was lively and good-natured, my imagination apt to run riot, my heart liberal and difinterested; though I was so obstinately attached to my own opinions that I could not well brook contradiction; and in the whole of my disposition, resembled that of Henry the Fifth, as described by Shakspear.

In my thirteenth year I went to Bath, where I was first introduced into the world as a woman, having been intitled to that privilege by my person, which was remarkably tall for my years; and there my fancy was quite captivated by the variety of diversions in which I was continually engaged: not that the parties were altogether new to me, but because I now found myself considered as a person of consequence, and surrounded by a crowd of admirers, who courted my acquaintance, and fed my vanity with praise and adulation. In short, whether or not I deserved their encomiums, I leave the world to judge; but my person was commended, and my talent in dancing met with universal applause. No wonder, then, that every thing appeared joyous to a young creature, who was so void of experience and distimulation, that she believed every body's heart as sincere as her own, and every object such as it appeared to be.

world

Among the swains who sighed, or pretended to sigh for me, were two that bore a pretty equal share of my favour; (it was too superficial to deserve the name of love.) One of these was a forward youth of sixteen, extremely handsome, lively, and impudent: he attended in quality of page upon the Princess Amelia, who spent that season at Bath. The other was a Scotch nobleman, turned of thirty, who was graced with a red ribband, and danced particularly well; two qualifications of great weight with a girl of my age, whose heart was not deeply interested in the cause. Nevertheless, the page prevailed over this formidable rival; though our amour went no farther than a little slirting, and ceased entirely when I left the place.

t

T

d

' Next year, however, I revisited this agreeable scene, and passed my time in the same circle of amusements; in which, indeed, each feafon at Bath is exactly refembled by that which succeeds, allowing for the difference of company, which is continually varying. There I met with the same incense, and again had my favourite, who was a North Briton, and captain of foot, near forty years of age, and a little lame; an impediment which I did not discover, until it was pointed out by fome of my companions, who rallied me upon my choice. He was always chearful, and very amorous; had a good countenance, and an excellent understanding; possessed a great deal of art, and would have perfuaded me to marry him, had I not been reftrained by the authority of my father, whose consent was to be obtained in favour of a man of his fortune.

At the fame time, many proposals of marriage were made to my parents; but as they came from people whom I did not like, I rejected them all; being determined to refuse every man who did not make his addresses to myself in person, because I had no notion of marrying for any thing but love.

Among these formal proposers was a Scottish earl, whose pretentions were broke off by some difference about fettlements; and the fon of an English baron, with whom my father was in treaty, when he carried me to town, on a vifit to a young lady, with whom I had been intimate from my infancy. She was just delivered of her first son, for whom we stood sponsors: so that this occasion detained us a whole month; during which, I went to a ball at court on the queen's birthday, and there, for the first time, felt what love and beauty were.

'The fecond fon of Duke H-, who had just returned from his travels, was dancing with the princefsroyal, when a young lady came and defired me to go and fee a stranger, whom all the world admired; upon which I followed her into the circle, and observed this object of admiration. He was dreffed in a coat of white cloth, faced with blue fattin embroidered with filver, of the same piece with his waiftcoat; his fine hair hung down his back in ringlets below his waift, his hat was laced with filver, and garnished with a white feather; but his person beggared all description. He was tall and graceful, neither corpulent nor meagre; his limbs finely proportioned, his countenance open and majestick, his eyes full of fweetness and vivacity, his teeth regular, and his pouting lips of the complexion of the damask rose. In short, he was formed for love, and inspired it wherever he appeared; nor was he a niggard of his talents, but liberally returned it; at leaft, what paffed for fuch; for he had a flow of gallantry, for which many ladies of this land can vouch from their own experience: but he exclaimed against marriage, because he had as yet met with no woman to whose charms he would furrender his liberty, though a prineefs of France, and a lady of the fame rank in —, were faid to be at that time enamoured with his person.

'I went home, totally ingroffed by his idea, flattering myfelf, that he had observed me with some attention; for I was young and new, and had the good fortune to attract the notice and approbation of the queen herself.

'Next day, being at the opera, I was agreeably furprized with the appearance of this amiable stranger, who no sooner saw me enter, than he approached so near to the place where I sat, that I overheard what he said to his companions; and was so happy as to find myself the object of his discourse, which abounded with rapturous expressions of love and admiration.

'I could not listen to these transports without emotion; my colour changed, my heart throbbed with unusual violence, and my eyes betrayed my inclination in fundry favourable glances, which he seemed to interpret aright, though he could not then avail himself of his success, so far as to communicate his sentiments by

h

e

a

1.

e:

is

of

nd

rd at

or

ge,

n-

8

fpeech, because we were strangers to each other.

'I passed that night in the most anxious suspense, and several days elapsed before I saw him again. At length, however, being at court on a ball-night, and determined against dancing, I perceived him among the crowd; and, to my unspeakable joy, saw him advance with my Lord P——, who introduced him to my acquaintance. He soon found means to alter my resolution; and I condescended to be his partner all the evening; during which he declared his passion in the most tender and persuasive terms that real love could dictate, or fruitful imagination invent.

'I believed his protestations, because I wished them true, and was an unexperienced girl of sisteen. I complied with his request of being permitted to visit me, and even invited him to breakfast next morning; so that you may imagine (I speak to those that feel) I did not that night enjoy much repose. Such was the hurry and slutter of my spirits, that I rose at fix to receive him at ten. I dressed myself in a new pink sattin gown, and my best laced night-cloaths, and was so animated by the occasion, that if ever I deserved a compliment upon my looks, it was my due at this meeting.

'The wished-for moment came that brought my lover to my view; I was overwhelmed with joy, modesty, and sear of I knew not what. We sat down to breakfast, but did not eat. He renewed his addresses with irresistible eloquence, and pressed me to accept of his hand without further hesitation; but to such a precipitate step I objected, as a measure repugnant to decency, as well as to that duty which I owed my father, whom I tenderly loved.

'Though I withstood this premature proposal, I did not attempt to disguise the situation of my thoughts: and thus commenced a tender correspondence, which was maintained by letters while I remained in the country, and carried on, when I was in town, by private interviews, twice or thrice a week, at the house of my milliner, where fuch endearments passed as refined and happy lovers know, and others can only guess. Truth and innocence prevailed on my fide, while his heart was fraught with fincerity and love. Such frequent intercourse created an intimacy which I began to think dangerous, and therefore yielded to his repeated defire that we might be united for ever; nay, I resolved to avoid him until the day should be fixed, and very innocently (though not very wifely) told him my reason for this determination, which was no other than a consciousness of my incapacity to refuse him any thing he should demand as a testimony of my love.

'The time was accordingly appointed, at the diftance of a few days, during which I intended to have implored my father's confent, though I had but faint hopes of obtaining it; but he was by some means or other apprized of our design, before I could prevail upon myself to make him acquainted with our purpose. I had danced with my lover at the Ridotto on the preceding evening, and there, perhaps, our eyes betrayed us. Certain it is, feveral of Lord W-m's relations. who disapproved of the match, came up and rallied him on his paffions; Lord S-k in particular used this remarkable expression; "Nephew, as much love as you please, but no matrimony."

Next day, the prieft being prepared, and the bridegroom waiting for me at the appointed place, in all the transports of impatient expectation, I was, without any previous warning, carried into the country by my father, who took no notice of the intelligence he had received, but decoyed me into the coach on pretence of taking the air: and when we had proceeded as far as Turnham Green, gave me to understand that he would dine in that place.

n

1-

ıy

0-

to es

of

·ele-

er,

lid

ts;

ich

the

ori-

e of

ned

efs.

his

fregan

re-

y, I

and

my

than

any

dif-

have

faint

ns or

lup-

pole.

pre-

rayed

us.

'There was no remedy: I was obliged to bear my disappointment, though with an aching heart, and followed him up ftairs into an apartment, where he told me he was minutely informed of my matrimonial scheme. I did not attempt to disguise the truth, but affured him, while tears gushed from my eyes, that my want of courage alone had hindered me from making him privy to my passion: though I owned, I should have married Lord W—m, even though he had dif-approved of my choice. I reminded him of the uneasy life I led at home, and frankly acknowledged, that I loved myadmirer too well to live without him; though if he would favour me with his confent, I would defer my intention, and punctually observe any day he would fix for our nuptials. Meanwhile, I begged he would permit me to fend a message to Lord W-m, who was waiting in expectation of my coming, and might without fuch notice imagine I was playing the jilt. He granted this last request; in consequence of which I fent a letter to my lover, who, when he received it, had almost fainted away, believing I should be locked up in the country, and inatched for ever from his arms. Tortured with these apprehensions, he changed cloaths immediately, and taking horfe, refolved to follow me whitherfoever we should go. VOL. III.

After dinner we proceeded as far as Brentford, where we lay, intending to be at my father's country louse next night; and my admirer putting up at the same inn, practised every expedient his invention could suggest to procure an interview; but all his endeavours were unsuccessful, because I, who little dreamed of his being so near, had gone to bed upon our first arrival, overwhelmed with affliction and tears.

'In the morning I threw myself at my father's feet, and conjured him by all the ties of paternal affection, to indulge me with an opportunity of seeing my admirer once more, before I should be conveyed from his wishes. The melancholy condition in which I preferred this supplication, melted the tender heart of my parent, who yielded to my solicitations, and carried me back to town for that purpose.

Lord W—m, who had watched our motions, and arrived at his own lodgings before we arrived at my father's house, obeyed my summons on the instant, and appeared before me like an angel. Our faculties were, for some minutes, suspended by a conflict of grief and joy. At length, I recovered the use of speech, and gave him to understand, that I was come to town in order to take my leave of him, by the permission of my father, whom I had promised to attend into the country next day, before he would consent to my return; the chief cause and pretence of which, was my earnest defire to convince him, that I was not to blame for the disappointment he had suffered, and that I should see him again in a month, when the nuptial knot should be tied in spite of all opposition.

'My lover, who was better acquainted with the world, had well night run diffracted with this information. He fwore he would not leave me, until I flould promife to meet and marry him next day; or, if I refused to grant that request, he would immediately leave the kingdom, to which he would never more return; and before his departure, facrifice Lord H—B—, son to the Duke of S. A——, who was the only perfon upon earth who could have betrayed us to my father, because he alone was trusted with the secret of our intended marriage, and had actually undertaken to give me away; an office which he afterwards declined. Lord W—m also affirmed, that my father decoyed me into the country, with a view of cooping me up, and sequestering me entirely from his view and correspondent pondance.

d. ry

he

ild

irs

his

al,

eet,

on,

ad-

his

ore-

my

me

0115,

ed at

tant.

lties

grief

, and

n in

of my

untry

; the

It de-

or the

ld fee

uld be

h the

orm -

fliould

f I re-

diately

ore re-

_B_,

ly per-

In vain I pleaded my father's well-known tenderness, and used all the arguments I could recollect to divert him from his revenge upon Lord H--. He was deaf to all my representations, and nothing, I found, would prevail upon him to suppress his refentment, but a positive promise to comply with his former defire. I told him I would hazard every thing to make him happy; but could not, with any regard to my duty, take fuch a step without the knowledge of my parent; or, if I were so inclined, it would be impracticable to elude his vigilance and fuspicion. However, he employed fuch pathetick remonstrances and retained fuch a powerful advocate within my own breaft, that before we parted I affured him, my whole power should be exerted for his satisfaction; and he fignified his resolution of fitting up all night, in expectation of feeing me at his lodgings.

'He had no fooner retired, than I went into the next room, and defired my father to fix a day for the marriage; in which case, I would chearfully wait upon him into the country; whereas, should he deny my request, on pretence of staying for the consent of my mother's relations, which was very uncertain, I would seize the first opportunity of marrying Lord W——m, cost what it would. He consented to the match, but would not appoint a day for the ceremony, which he proposed to defer until all parties should be agreed; and such a favourable crifis, I feared, would never happen.

'I therefore refolved within myself to gratify my lover's expectation, by eloping, if possible, that very night; though the execution of this plan was extremely difficult, because my father was upon the alarm, and my own maid, who was my bedfellow, altogether in his interest. Notwithstanding these considerations, I found means to engage one of the house-maids in my behalf, who bespoke an hackney-coach, to be kept in waiting all night: and to bed I went with my Abigail, whom, as I had not closed an eye, I waked about five in the morning, and sent to pack up some things for our intended journey.

'While she was thus employed, I got up, and huddled on my cloaths, standing upon my pillow, left my father, who lay in the chamber below, should hear me a-foot, and suspect my design.

· Having dressed myself with great dispatch and disorder, I shounced down stairs, staking as heavily as I could tread, that he might mistake me for one of the servants: and my consederate opening the door, I salied out into the street, though I knew not which way to turn: and, to my unspeakable mortification, neither coach nor chair appeared.

'Having travelled on foot a good way, in hope of finding a convenience, and being not only disappointed in that particular, but also bewildered in my peregrination, I began to be exceedingly alarmed with the apprehension of being met by some person who might know me; because, in that case, my design would undoubtedly have been discovered, from every circumstance of my appearance at that time of day, for I had put on the very cloaths which I had pulled off over night, fo that my drefs was altogether odd and peculiar; my shoes were very fine, and over a large hoop I wore a pink fattin quilted petticoat trimmed with filver, which was partly covered by a white dimity nightgown, a full quarter of a yard too short; my handkerchief and apron were hurried on without pinning; my night-cap could not contain my hair, which hung about my ears in great diforder; and my countenance denoted a mixture of hope and fear, joy and shame.

In this dilemma, I made my addresses to that ho-arm, ether ions, in my opt in igail, t five hudit my ar me

nd dify as I of the I falh way neither ope of sointed eregriith the might uld unircumir I had off over d pecuhoop I with fil-

with fily nightny handinning; ch hung intenance ame. that honourable rourable member of fociety, a floo black, whom I carneftly intreated to provide me with a coach or chair, promising to reward him liberally for his trouble; but he having the misfortune to be lame, was unable to keep up with my pace; fo that, by his advice and direction, I went into the first publick-house I found open, where I stayed some time, in the utmost consternation, among a crew of wretches whom I thought proper to bribe for their civility, not without the terror of being stripped. At length, however, my messenger returned with a chair, of which I took immediate possession; and fearing that, by this time, my family would be alarmed, and send directly to Lord W——m's lodgings, I ordered myself to be carried thither backwards, that so I might pass undiscovered.

This stratagem succeeded according to my wish; I ran up stairs, in a state of trepidation, to my faithful lover, who waited for me with the most impatient and fearful suspense. At sight of me his eyes lightened with transport; he caught me in his arms, as the richest present Heaven could bestow; gave me to understand that my father had already sent to his lodgings in quest of me; then applauding my love and resolution in the most rapturous terms, he ordered a hackney-coach to be called, and that we might run no risk of separation, attended me to church, where we were lawfully joined in the fight of Heaven.

with double aggravation. I dreaded the fight of my father, and shared all the forrow he suffered on account of my undutiful behaviour; for I loved him with such piety of affection, that I would have endured every other species of distress, rather than have given him the least uncasiness: but love (where he reigns in full empire) is altogether irresistible, surmounts every difficulty, and swallows up all other considerations. This was the case with me; and now the irrevocable step was taken, my first care was to avoid his sight. With this view, I begged that Lord W——m would think of fome remote place in the country, to which we might retire for the present: and he forthwith conducted me to a house on Blackheath, where we were very civilly received by a laughter-loving dame, who seemed to missake me for one of her own sisterhood.

'I no fooner perceived her opinion, than I defired Lord W—m to undeceive her; upon which she was acquainted with the nature of my fituation, and shewed us into a private room, where I called for pen and paper, and wrote an apology to my father, for having acted contrary to his will in so important a concern.

This task being performed, the bridegroom gave me to understand, that there was a necessity for our being bedded immediately, in order to render the marriage binding, left my father should discover and part us before consummation. I pleaded hard for a respite till the evening, objecting to the indecency of going to bed before noon; but he found means to invalidate all my arguments; and to convince me that it was now my duty to obey. Rather than hazard the imputation of being obstinate and refractory on the first day of my probation, I suffered myself to be led into a chamber, which was darkened by my express stipulation, that my shame and confusion might be the better concealed, and yielded to the privilege of a dear husband, who loved me to adoration.

'About five o'clock in the afternoon we were collect to dinner, which we had ordered to be ready at four; but fuch a paltry care had been forgot, amidft the transports of our mutual blifs. We got up, however; and when we came down stairs, I was assumed to see the light of day, or meet the eyes of my beloved lord. I ate little, said less, was happy, though overwhelmed with confusion; underwent a thousan agitations, some of which were painful, but by far the greater part belonged to rapture and delight; we were emparadised in the gratification of our mutual wishes, and felt all that love can bestow, and sensibility can enjoy.

In the twilight we returned to Lord W-m's lodgings in town, where I received a letter from my father, importing, that he would never fee me again. But there was one circumstance in his manner of writing, from which I conceived a happy presage of his future indulgence. He had begun with his usual appellation of Dear Fanny, which though it was expunged to make way for the word Madam, encouraged me to hope that his paternal fondness was not yet extinguished.

At supper we were visited by Lord W——m's younger fister, who laughed at us for our inconsiderate match, though she owned, she envied our happiness, and offered me the use of her cloaths, until I could retrieve my own. She was a woman of a great deal of humour, plain but genteel, civil, friendly, and perfectly well bred. She favoured us with her company till the night was pretty far advanced, and did not take her leave till we retired to our apartment.

As our lodgings were not spacious or magnificent, we resolved to see little company; but this resolution was frustrated by the numerous acquaintance of Lord W—m, who let in half the town; so that I run the gauntlet for a whole week among a set of wits, who always delight in teazing a young creature of any note, when she happens to make such a stolen match. Among those that visited us upon this occasion, was my lord's younger brother, who was at that time in keeping with a rich heires of masculine memory, and took that opportunity of making a parade with his equipage, which was indeed very magnificent, but altogether difregarded by us, whose happiness consisted in the opulence of mutual love.

'This ceremony of receiving visits being performed, we went to wait on his mother the Duchess of H——, who hearing I was an heiress, readily forgave her son for marrying without her knowledge and consent, and favoured us with a very cordial reception; infomuch, that, for several months, we dined almost constantly at her table; and I must own, I always found her unaltered in her civility and affection, contrary to her general character, which was haughty and capricious. She was undoubtedly a woman of great fpirit and understanding, but subject to an infirmity which very much impairs and disguises every other qualification.

n

qualification.

'In about three weeks after our marriage, I was so happy as to obtain the forgiveness of my father, to whose house we repaired, in order to pay our respects and submission. At sight of me he wept; nor did I behold his tears unmoved: my heart was overcharged with tenderness and sorrow, for having offended such an indulgent parent; so that I mingled my tears with his; while my dear husband, whose soul was of the softest and gentless mould, melted with sympathy at the affecting scene.

'Being thus reconciled to my father, we attended him into the country, where we were received by my mother, who was a fenfible good woman, though not fusceptible to love, and therefore less apt to excuse a weakness to which she was an utter stranger. This was likewise the case with an uncle, from whom I had great expectations. He was a plain good-natured man, and treated us with great courtesy; though his motions, in point of love, were not exactly conformable to ours. Nevertheless, I was, and seemed to be so happy in my choice, that say family not only became satisfied with the match, but exceedingly fond of Lord W——m.

After a fhort stay with them in the country, we returned to London, in order to be introduced at court, and then set out for the North, on a visit to my brother-in-law the Duke of H—, who had, by a letter to Lord W——m, invited us to his habituation. My father accordingly equipped us with horses and money; for our own sinances were extremely slender, confisting only of a small pension allowed by his grace, upon whom the brothers were entirely dependent, the father having died suddenly, before suitable provision could be made for his younger children. When

When I took my leave of my relations, bidding adieu to my paternal home, and found myfelf launching into a world of care and trouble, though the voyage on my companion the person on whom I doated to distracwhich I had embarked was altogether voluntary, and tion, I could not help feeling fome melancholy fenfations: which, however, in a little time, gave way to a train of more agreeable ideas. I was visited in town by almost all the women of fashion, many of whom, I perceived, envied me the poffession of a man who had made ftrange havock among their hearts, and fome of them knew the value of his favour. One in particular endeavoured to cultivate my friendship with fingular marks of regard; but I thought proper to difcourage her advances, by keeping within the bounds of bare civility; and indeed, to none of them was I lavish of my complaifance, for I dedicated my whole time to the object of my affection, who engrofied my wishes to fuch a degree, that although I was never jealous, (because I had no reason to be so) I envied the happiness of every woman whom he chanced at any time to hand into a coach.

'The Duchess of -, who was newly married to the Earl of P-, a particular friend of Lord W-m's, carried me to court, and prefented me to the queen, who expressed her approbation of my person in very particular terms, and observed the satisfaction that appeared in my countenance, with marks of admiration; defired her ladies to take notice, how little happiness depended upon wealth, fince there was more joy in my face than in all her court besides.

d

ut

fo

to

ts

I

cd

ch

th

he

at

ed

ny

ot

a

115

ad

red .

his

ble

ia

me

ord

Te-

urt,

TO-

tter

My

ey;

Ing

non

ther

puld

ien

Such a declaration could not fail to overwhelm me with blushes, which her majesty seemed to behold with pleafure; for the frequently repeated the remark, and shewed me to all the foreigners of distinction, with many gracious expressions of favour. She wished Lord W-m happiness instead of joy: and was pleased to promife that the would provide for her pretty beggars; and poor enough we certainly were in every article, but love. Nevertheless we felt no necessities, but passed the summer in a variety of pleasures and parties; the greatest part of which were planned by Lord W—'s sister and another lady, who was at that time mistress to the prime minister. The first was a wit, but homely in her person, the other, a woman of great beauty and masculine understanding; and a particular friendship subsisted between them, though they were both lovers of power and admiration.

'This lady, who fat at the helm, was extremely elegant as well as expensive in her diversions, in many of which we bore a share; particularly her parties upon the water, which were contrived in all the magnificence of tafte. In the course of these amusements, a trifling circumstance occurred, which I shall relate as an instance of that jealous sensibility which characterized Lord W-m's disposition. A large company of ladies and gentlemen having agreed to dine at Vauxhall, and fup at Marble Hall, where we proposed to conclude the evening with a dance, one barge being infufficient to contain the whole company, we were divided by lots; in consequence of which, my husband and I were parted. The separation was equally mottifying to us both, who, though married, were still lovers; and my chagrin was increased, when I perceived that I was doomed to fit by Sir W-Ya man of professed gallantry; for, although Lord W-m had, before his marriage, made his addresses to every woman he faw, I knew very well he did not defire that any person should make love to his wife.

'That I might not therefore give umbrage, by talking to this gallant, I conversed with a Scots nobleman, who, according to common report, had formerly sighed among my admirers, by these means, in seeking to avoid one error, I unwittingly plunged myself into a greater; and disobliged Lord W——m so much, that he could not conceal his displeasure; nay, so deeply was he offended at my conduct, that in the evening, when the ball began, he would scarce deign to take me

ffed

the

s to

nely

and

fhip

ele-

y of

1 the

ce of

fling

a in-

rized

y of

aux-

ed to

g in-

e di-

band

mo! - e still

per-

Lord

reffes

d not

talk-

eman,

fighed

ng to

into a

, that

leeply

ening.

ke me

by

ife.

by the hand in the course of dancing, and darted such unkind looks as pierced me to the very soul. What augmented my concern, was my ignorance of the tespass I had committed. I was tortured with a thousand measty resections; I began to fear that I had mistaken his temper, and given my heart to a man who was tired of possession; though I resolved to bear without complaining the missortune I had entailed upon myself.

'I feized the first opportunity of speaking to him. and thereby discovered the cause of his chagrin; but, as there was no time for expostulation, the misunderflanding continued on his fide, with fuch evident marks of uneafiness, that every individual of the company made up to me, and enquired about the cause of his disorder; so that I was fain to amuse their concern by faying that he had been ill the day before, and dancing did not agree with his constitution. So much was he incenfed by this unhappy circumstance of my conduct, which was void of all intention to offend him, that he determined to be revenged of me for my indifcretion; and, at fupper, chancing to fit between two very handfome ladies (one of whom is lately dead, and the other, at present, my neighbour in the country) he affected an air of gaiety, and openly coquetted with them both.

'This was not the only punishment he inflicted on his innocent wife. In the course of our entertainment, we engaged in some simple diversion, in consequence of which the gentlemen were ordered to salute the ladies; when Lord W——, in performing this command, unkindly neglected me in my turn; and I had occasion for all my discretion and pride, to conceal from the company the agonies I felt at this mark of indifference and discrete. However, I obtained the victory over mys B, and pretended to laugh at his husband-like behaviour, while the tears stood in my eyes, and my heart

fwelled even to burfting.

We broke up about five, after having spent the most tedious evening I had ever known; and this offended lover went to bed in a state of sullen silence and difguft.

difgust. Whatever desire I had to come to an explanation, I thought myself so much aggrieved by his unreasonable prejudice, that I could not prevail upon myself to demand a conference, till after his first nap, when my pride giving way to my tenderness, I clasped him in my arms, though he pretended to discourage these advances of my love: I asked how he could be so unjust as to take umbrage at my civility to a man whom he knew I had refused for his sake. I chid him for his barbarous endeavours to awake my jealously, and used such irresistible arguments in my own vindication, that he was convinced of my innocence, sealed my acquital with a kind embrace, and we mutually enjoyed the foft transports of a fend reconciliation.

Never was paffion more eager, delicate or unreferved, than that which glowed within our breafts. Far from being cloyed with the possession of each other, our raptures feemed to increase with the term of our union. When we were parted, though but for a few hours, by the necessary avocations of life, we were unhappy during that brief separation, and met again, like lovers who know no joy but in one another's prefence. How many delicious evenings did we fpend together, in our little apartment, after we had ordered the candles to be taken away, that we might enjoy the agreeable reflection of the moon in a fine fummer's evening. Such a mild and folemn frene naturally difposes the mind to peace and benevolence; but when improved with the convertation of the man one loves, it fills the imagination with ideas of ineffable delight! For my own part, I can fafely fay, my heart was fo wholly engroffed by my hufband, that I never took pleafure in any divertion where he was not perfonally concerned; nor was I ever guilty of one thought repugnant to my duty and my love.

In the autumn we fet out for the North, and were met on the rode by the duke and twenty gentlemen, who conducted us to H—n, where we lived in all imaginable splendour. His grace, at that time, maintained above an hundred fervants, with a band of musick, which always performed at dinner; kept open table, and was vifited by a great deal of company. The economy of his house was superintended by his eldeft fifter, a beautiful young lady of an amiable temper, with whom I foon contracted an intimate friendship. She and the duke used to rally me upon my fondness for Lord W---m, who was a fort of an humourift, and apt to be in a pet, in which case he would leave the company, and go to bed by feven o'clock in . the evening. On these occasions, I always disappeared, giving up every consideration to that of pleasing my husband, notwithstanding the ridicule of his relations, who taxed me with having spoiled him with too much indulgence. But how could I express too much tenderness and condescension, for a man who doated upon me to fuch excess, that when business obliged him to leave me, he always fnatched the first opportunity to return, and often rode through darkness, storms, and tempefts, to my arms!

'Having stayed about seven months in this place, I found myself in a fair way of being a mother; and that I might be near my own relations, in such an interesting situation, I and my dear companion departed from H—n, not without great reluctance; for I was fond of the Scots in general, who treated me with great hospitality and respect; and to this day, they pay me the compliment of saying, I was one of the best wives in that country, which is so justly celebrated for good women.

pla-

un-

my-

ap,

ped

age

e io

man him

uly,

ica-

my

oyed

nre-

alts.

our

few

un-

gain,

pre-

d tolered

7 the

ner's

dif-

when

oves,

ight!

as fo

nally

pug-

and

entle-

red in time,

ined

Lord W—m having attended me to my father's house, was obliged to return to Scotland to support his interest in being elected member of parliament; so that he took his leave of me, with a full resolution of seeing me again, before the time of my lying-in; and all the comfort I enjoyed in his absence, was the perusal of his letters, which I punctually received, together with those of his sister, who from time to time favoured me with assurances of his constancy and devotion. Indeed these Vol., III.

testimonials were necessary to one of my disposition; for I was none of those who could be contented with half an heart. I could not even spare one complacent look to any other woman, but expected the undivided homage of his love. Had I been disappointed in this expectation, I should, (though a wife) have rebelled or died.

Meanwhile my parents treated me with great tenderness, intending that Lord W——m should be settled in a house of his own, and accommodated with my fortune, and his expectations from the queen were very sanguine, when I was taken ill, and delivered of a dead child; an event which affected me extremely. When I understood the extent of my misfortune, my heart throbbed with such violence, that my breast could scarce contain it; and my anxiety being aggravated by the absence of my lord, produced a dangerous sever, of which he was no sooner apprized by letter, than he came post from Scotland; but before his arrival, I was supposed to be in a fair way.

During this journey, he was tortured with all that terrible fulpense, which prevails in the minds of those who are in danger of losing that which is most dear to them; and when he entered the house, was so much overwhelmed with apprehension, that he durst not enquire about the state of my health.

'As for my part, I never closed an eye from the time on which I expected his return; and when I heard his voice, I threw open my curtains, and fat up in the bed to receive him, though at the hazard of my life. He run towards me with all the eagerness of passion, and classed me in his arms; he kneeled by the bed side, kissed my hand a thousand times, and wept with transports of tenderness and joy. In short, this meeting was so pathetick, as to overcome my enseebled constitution; and we were parted by those who were wiser than ourselves, and saw nothing was so proper for us as a little repose.

But how shall I relate the deplorable transition from from envied happiness to excess of misery, which I now fustained! My month was hardly up, when my dear husband was taken ill; perhaps the fatigue of body as well as of mind, which he had undergone on my account, occasioned a fatal ferment in his blood, and his health fell a facrifice to his love. Physicians were called from London; but, alas! they brought no hopes of his recovery. By their advice, he was removed to town, for the convenience of being punctually attended. Every moment was too precious to be thrown away; he was therefore immediately put into the coach, though the day was far fpent; and I, though exceedingly weak, accompanied him in the journey, which was performed by the light of flambeaus, and rendered unfpeakably shocking, by the dismal apprehension of lofing him every moment.

'At length, however, we arrived at our lodgings in Pall Mall, where I lay by him on the floor, and attended the issue of his distemper, in all the agonies of horror and despair. In a little time his malady settled upon his brain, and in his delirium, he uttered fuch dreadful exclamations, as were fufficient to pierce the most savage heart. What effect then must they have had on mine, which was fraught with every fentiment of the most melting affection! It was not a common grief that took possession of my soul; I felt all the aggravation of the most acute distress. I sometimes ran down to the street in a fit of distraction; I sent for the doctors every minute; I wearied Heaven with my prayers: even now my heart aches at the remembrance of what I fuffered, and I cannot without trembling proceed with the woeful flory.

After having lain infentible fome days, he recovered the use of speech, and called upon my name, which he had a thousand times repeated while he was bereft of reason. All hope of his life was now relinquished, and I was led to his bed-side to receive his last adieu, being directed to summon all my fortitude, and suppress my forrow, that he might not be disturbed by my

from

for

alf

ok

10-

his

led

en-

let-

my

ery

ead

hen

eart

arce

the

of

he

was

that

hole

ar to

nuch

t en-

n the

neard

n the life.

ffion,

e bed

with

meet-

con-

wiler

for us

agitation. I collected all my resolution to support me in this affecting scene. I saw my dear lord in extremity. The beauties of his youth were all decayed; yet his eyes, though languid, retained unspeakable sweetness and expression. He felt his end approaching, put forth his hand, and with a look full of complacency and benevolence, uttered such a tender tale—Good Heaven! how had I deserved such accumulated affliction! the bare remembrance of which now melts me into tears! Human nature could not undergo my situation, without suffering an extasy of grief! I classed him in my arms, and kissed him a thousand times, with the most violent emotions of woe; but I was torn from his embrace, and in a little time he was ravished for ever from my view.

'On that fatal morning, which put a period to his life, I faw the Duches of L—— approach my bed, and, from her appearance, concluded that he was no more; yet I begged she would not confirm the unhappy presage, by announcing his death; and she accordingly preserved the most emphatick silence. I got up, and trod softly over his head, as if I had been asraid of interrupting his repose. Alas! he was no longer sensible of such disturbance. I was seized with a stupe-faction of sorrow: I threw up the window, and looking around, thought the sun shone with the most dismal aspect; every thing was solitary, chearless, and replete with horror.

In this condition I was, by the direction of my friend, conveyed to her house, where my faculties were so overpowered by the load of anguish which oppressed me, that I know not what passed during the first days of my unhappy widowhood; this only I know, the kind duchess treated me with all imaginable care and compassion, and carried me to her country-house, where I stayed some months; during which, she endeavoured to comfort me with all the amusements she could invent, and laid me under such obligations, as shall never be erased from my remembrance: yet, notwithstanding all her care and concern, I was, by my excess of grief, plunged plunged into a languishing distemper, for which my physicians advised me to drink the Bath waters.

In compliance with this prescription, I went this ther towards the end of summer, and found some benefit by adhering to their directions; though I seldom went abroad, except when I visited my sister-in-law, who was there with the princes; and upon these occasions, I never sailed to attract the notice of the company, who were struck with the appearance of such a young creature in weeds. Nor was I free from the persecution of professed admirers; but being dead to all joy, I was deaf to the voice of adulation.

About Christmas, I repaired to my father's house, where my forrows were revived by every object that recalled the idea of my dear lamented lord. But these melancholy reflections I was obliged to bear, because I had no other home or habitation, being left an unprovided widow, altogether dependent on the affection of my own family.

t me

nity.

eyes,

ex-

and,

ence,

had I

nem-

n na-

ering

and

emo-

d in a

o his

bed,

as no

appy

lingly

, and

of in-

fen-

stupe-

look-

lifmal

replete

of my

s were

prefied

It days

w, the

re and

where

voured

uld in-

l never

anding

f grief, unged

During this winter, divers overtures were made to my father, by people who demanded me in marriage; but my heart was not yet fufficiently weaned from my former passion, to admit the thoughts of another master. Among those that presented their proposals, was a certain young nobleman, who, upon the first news of Lord W-m's death, came post from Paris, in order to declare his paffion. He made his first appearance in a hired chariot and fix, accompanied by a big fat fellow, whom (as I afterwards learned) he had engaged to found his praises, with the promise of a thousand pounds, in lieu of which he paid him with forty. Whether it was with a view of screening himself from the cold, or of making a comfortable medium in case of being overturned, and falling under his weighty companion, I know not; but certain it is, the carriage was stuffed with hay, in such a manner, that when he arrived, the fervants were at fome pains in rummaging and removing it, before they could come at their mafter, or help him to alight. When he was lifted out of the chariot, he exhibited a very ludicrous figure to the view; he was a thin, meagre, shivering creature, of a low stature, with little black eyes, a long nose, sallow complexion, and pitted with the small-pox; dressed in a coat of light brown frieze lined with pink-coloured shag, a monstrous solitaire and bag, and (if I remember aright) a pair of huge jack-boots. In a word, his whole appearance was so little calculated for inspiring love, that I had (on the strength of seeing him once before at Oxford) set him down as the last man on earth whom I would chuse to wed; and I will venture to affirm, that he was in every particular the very reverse of my late husband.

As my father was not at home, he stayed but one evening, and left his errand with my mother, to whom he was as disagreeable as to myself; so that his proposal was absolutely rejected; and I heard no more of him during the space of three whole months; at the expiration of which I went to town, where this mortifying sigure presented itself again, and renewed his suit, offering such advantageous terms of settlement, that my father began to relish the match, and warmly recommended it to my consideration.

'Lord W—m's relations advised me to embrace the opportunity of making myself independent; all my acquaintance plied me with arguments to the same purpose: I was uneasy at home, and indifferent to all mankind. I weighed the motives with the objections, and with reluctance yielded to the importunity of my friends.

friends.

'In consequence of this determination, the little gentleman was permitted to visit me; and the manner of his address did not at all alter the opinion I had conceived of his character and understanding. I was even shocked at the prospect of marrying a man whom I could not love; and, in order to disburben my own conscience, took an opportunity of telling him one evening, as we sat opposite to each other, that it was not in my power to command my affection, and therefore he could not expect the possession of my heart, Lord W—m's indulgence having spoiled me for a wife; nevertheless, I would endeavour to contract a friendship for him, which would entirely depend upon his own behaviour.

'To this declaration he replied (to my great furprize) that he did not defire me to love him, my friendthip was fufficient; and next day repeated this strange instance of moderation in a letter, which I communicated to my fister, who laughed heartily at the contents, and persuaded me, that since I could love no man, he was the properest person to be my husband.

the

fa

ow

in

red

m-

his

fore

om

rm,

my

one

nom

po-

e of

the

orti-

his

ent,

mly

race

lmy

pur-

o all

ions,

f my

gener of

con-

even

om I

own

one

t was therefore Accordingly, the wedding-cloaths and equipage being prepared, the day—the fatal day was fixed! on the morning of which I went to the house of my brother-in-law, Duke H——, who loved me tenderly, and took my leave of the family; a family which I shall always remember with love, honour, and esteem. His grace received me in the most affectionate manner, saying, at parting, "Lady W——, if he does not use you well, I will take you back again."

'The bridegroom and I met at Ox—Charel, where the ceremony was performed by the Bishop of W-, in presence of his lordship's mother, my father, and another lady. The nuptial-knot being tied, we fet out for my father's house in the country, and proceeded full twenty miles on our journey, before my lord opened his mouth; my thoughts having been all that time employed on fomething quite foreign to my prefent fituation; for I was then but a giddy girl of eighteen. At length my father broke filence, and clapping his lordship on the shoulder, told him he was but a dull bridegroom; upon which, my lord gave him to understand, that he was out of spirits. This dejection continued all the day, notwithstanding the refreshment of a plentiful dinner, which he ate upon the road; and in the evening we arrived at the place of our deffination, where we were kindly received by my mother, though

fhe

the had no liking to the match; and after supper, we retired to our apartment.

'It was here that I had occasion to perceive the most disagreeable contrast between my present help-mate and my former lord. Instead of slying to my arms with all the eagerness of love and rapture, this manly representative sat moping in a corner, like a criminal on execution-day, and owned he was assamed to bed a woman, whose hand he had scarce ever touched.

'I could not help being affected with this pufillanimous behaviour; I remembered Lord W--m, while I surveyed the object before me, and made such a comparison as filled me with horror and disgust: nay, to fuch a degree did my aversion to this phantom prevail, that I began to sweat with anguish at the thought of being subjected to his pleasure: and when, after a long hesitation, he ventured to approach me, I trembled as if I had been exposed to the embraces of a rattle-fnake. Nor did the efforts of his love diminish this antipathy. His attempts were like the pawings of an imp, fent from hell to feize and torment fome guilty wretch, fuch as are exhibited in some dramatick performance, which I never fee acted without remembering my wedding-night. By fuch fladowy, unfubstantial vexatious behaviour, was I tantalized and robbed of my repose; and early next morning I got up, with a most sovereign contempt for my bed-fellow, who indulged himfelf in bed till eleven.

'Having passed a few days in this place, I went home with him to his house at Twickenham; and soon after we were presented at court, when the queen-was pleased to say to my lord's mother, she did not doubt but we should be an happy couple, for I had been a good wife to my former husband.

Whatever deficiencies I had to complain of in my new spouse, he was not wanting in point of liberality: I was presented with a very sine chariot studded with silver nails, and such a profusion of jewels as surnished a joke to some of my acquaintance, who observed that

tainment,

noft and all fenexewo-

WC

illawhile
comy, to
vail,
at of long ed as ake.
athy,
fent
etch,
ance,
wed-

went d foon was doubt a good

my

ith a

n my ality; with nished d that was I was formerly Queen of Hearts, but now metamorphosed into the Queen of Diamonds. I now also had an opportunity (which I did not let flip) of paying Lord W-m's debts from my privy purse: and on that score received the thanks of his elder brother, who (though he had undertaken to discharge them) delayed the execution of his purpose longer than I thought they fhould remain unpaid. This uncommon fplendor attracted the eyes and envy of my competitors, who were the more implacable in their refentments, because, notwithstanding my marriage, I was as much as ever followed by the men of gallantry and pleafure, among whom it is a constant maxim, that a woman never witholds her affections from her husband without an intention to bestow them somewhere else. I never appeared without a train of admirers, and my house in the country was always crouded with gay young men of quality.

'Among those who cultivated my good graces with the greatest skill and affiduity, were the Earl C-, and Mr. S ---, brother to Lord F ---. The former of whom, in the course of his addresses, treated me with an entertainment of furprizing magnificence, disposed into a dinner, supper, and ball; to which I, at his defire, invited eleven ladies, whom he paired with the like number of his own fex; fo that the whole company amounted to twenty-four. We were regaled with a most elegant dinner, in an apartment which was altogether fuperb, and ferved by gentlemen only, no livery fervant being permitted to come within the door. In the afternoon we embarked in two splendid barges, being attended by a band of musick in a third; and enjoyed a delightful evening upon the river, till the twilight, when we returned and began the ball, which was conducted with fuch order and taste, that mirth and good-humour prevailed. No diffatisfaction appeared, except in the countenance of one old maid, fince married to a fon of the Duke of -, who though fhe would not refuse to partake of such an agreeable entertainment, was displeased that I should have the honour of inviting her. O baleful Envy! thou self-tormenting fiend! How dost thou predominate in all assemblies, from the grand gala of a court to the meeting of simple peasants at their harvest-home! Nor is the prevalence of this fordid passion to be wondered at, if we consider the weakness, pride, and vanity of our sex. The presence of one favourite man shall posson the enjoyment of a whole company, and produce the most rancorous enmity betwixt the closeft friends.

'I danced with the master of the ball, who employed all the artillery of his eloquence in making love; yet I did not listen to his addresses, for he was not to my tafte, though he poffeffed an agreeable person, and a good acquired understanding; but he was utterly ignorant of that gentle prevailing art which I afterwards experienced in Mr. S-, and which was the only method he could have fuccefsfully practifed, in feducing a young woman like me, born with fentiments of honour, and trained up in the paths of religion and vir-This young gentleman was, indeed, absolutely master of those infinuating qualifications which few women of passion and sensibility can resist; and had a person every way adapted for profiting by these insiduous talents. He was well acquainted with the human heart, confcious of his own power and capacity, and exercifed these endowments with unwearied perseverance. He was tall and thin, of a shape and fize perfectly agreeable to my taste, with large blue eloquent eyes, good teeth, and a long head turned to gallantry. His behaviour was the standard of politeness, and all his advances were conducted with the most profound respect; which is the most effectual expedient a man can use against us, if he can find means to persuade us that it proceeds from the excess and delicacy of his passion. It is no other than a filent compliment, by which our accomplishments are continually flattered, and pleases in proportion to the supposed understanding of him who By. pays it.

ti

v

to

p

al

10

in

al

of

W

di

at

of

fr

fr

fh

ch

fu

171

* By these arts and advantages this consummate politician in love began by degrees to sap the foundations of my conjugal faith; he stole imperceptibly into my affection, and by dint of opportunity, which he well knew how to improve, triumphed, at last, over all his rivals.

with Earl C——. That nobleman was also rivalled by Lord C— H—, a Scotchman, who had been an intimate and relation of my former husband. Him I would have preferred to most of his competitors, and actually coquetted with him for some time: but the amour was interrupted by his going to Ireland; upon which occasion, understanding that he was but indifferently provided with money, I made him a present of a gold snuff-box, in which was inclosed a bank-note; a trifling mark of my esteem, which he afterwards justified by the most grateful, friendly, and genteel behaviour; and as we corresponded by letters, I frankly told him, that Mr. S— had stepped in, and won the palm from all the rest of my admirers.

d

I

y

a

0-ds

ly

C-

of

ir-

ely

ew

da

lu-

nan

ex-

ice.

ree-

ood

ha-

ad-

ect;

use

at it

. It

races in

who

By

'This new favourite's mother and fifters, who lived in the neighbourhood, were my constant companions; and, in confequence of this intimacy, he never let a day pass without paying his respects to me in person; nay, to ingenious was he in contriving the means of promoting his fuit, that whether I rode or walked, went abroad or stayed at home, he was always of course one of the party: fo that his defign feemed to engross his whole vigilance and attention. Thus he studied my disposition, and established himself in my good opinion at the fame time. He found my heart was fufceptible of every tender impression, and saw that I was not free from the vanity of youth; he had already acquired my friendship and esteem, from which he knew there was a fhort and easy transition to love. By his penetration chusing proper seasons for the theme, he urged it with fuch pathetick vows and artful adulation, as well might captivate a young woman of my complexion and mexperience, inexperience, and circumstanced as I was, with a huf-

to

k

p

ai

te

po

in

te

ou

an

we

an

cea

ou

dif

fitt

cor

inte

my

nitl

on

was

fafe

felf

But

and

far

min

I fe.

lepa

terv

at hi

facre

band whom I had fuch reason to despise.

'Though he thus made an infensible progress in my heart, he did not find my virtue an easy conquest; and I myself was ignorant of the advantage he had gained, with regard to my inclinations, until I was convinced of his success by an alarm of jealousy which I one day felt, at seeing him engaged in conversation with another lady. I forthwith recognized this symptom of love, with which I had been formerly acquainted, and trembled at the discovery of my own weakness. I underwent a strange agitation and mixture of contrary sensations: I was pleased with the passion, yet ashamed of avowing it even to my own mind. The rights of a husband (though mine was but a nominal one) occurred to my resection, and virtue, modesty, and honour, forbade me to cherish the guilty stame.

When I encouraged these laudable scruples, and refolved to facrifice my love to duty and reputation, my lord was almost every day employed in riding post to my father, with complaints of my conduct, which was hitherto irreproachable; though the greatest grievance which he pretended to have suffered, was my refusing to comply with his desire, when he entreated me to lie a whole hour every morning with my neck uncovered, that by gazing he might quiet the perturbation of his spirits. From this request you may judge of the man, as well as of the regard I must entertain for his character and disposition.

During the whole summer I was besieged by my artful undoor, and in the autumn set out with my lord for Bath; where, by reason of the intimacy that substited between our families, we lived in the same house with my lover and his sister, who, with another agreeable young lady, accompanied us in this expedition. By this time Mr. S— had extorted from me a confession of a mutual slame; though I assured him that it should never induce me to give up the valuable possession of an unspotted character, and a conscience void condescension,

of offence. I offered him all the enjoyment he could reap from an unreferved intercourse of souls, abstracted from any sensual consideration. He eagerly embraced the Platonick proposal, because he had sagacity enough to foresee the issue of such chimerical contracts, and knew me too well to think he could accomplish his purpose without seeming to acquiesce in my own terms, and cultivating my tenderness under the specious pretext.

d

1-

ed

a

r-

ır,

re-

ny

to

vas

nce

ing

lie

ed,

his

rac-

my.

lord

fub-

ouse

gree-

tion.

nfel-

nat it

offer-

void

of

VOL. III.

'In consequence of this agreement, we took all opportunities of seeing each other in private; and these interviews were spent in mutual protestations of disinterested love. This correspondence, though dangerous, was (on my side) equally innocent and endearing; and many happy hours we passed, before my sentiments were discovered. At length my lover was taken ill, and then my passion burst out beyond the power of concealment; my grief and anxiety became is conspicuous in my countenance, and my behaviour was so indiscreet, that every body in the house perceived the situation of my thoughts, and blamed my conduct accordingly.

'Certain it is, I was extremely imprudent, though intentionally innocent. I have lain whole nights by my lord, who teazed and tormented me for that which nither I could give nor he could take, and ruminated on the fatal consequence of this unhappy flame, until I was worked into a fever of difquiet. I faw there was fafety but in flight, and often determined to banish myfelf for ever from the fight of this dangerous intruder. But my resolution always failed at the approach of day, and my defire of feeing him as conftantly recurred. So far was I from perfifting in fuch commendable determinations, that, on the eve of our departure from Bath, I felt the keenest pangs of forrow at our approaching feparation; and as we could not enjoy our private interviews at my house in town, I promised to visit him at his own apartments, after he had fworn by all that's facred, that he would take no finister advantage of my condescension, by prefuming upon the opportunities I should give.

'He kept his word; for he faw I trusted to it with fear and trembling, and perceived that my apprehenfion was not affected, but the natural concern of a young creature, distracted between love and duty, whom had he alarmed, he never would have feen within his doors again. Instead of pressing me with solicitations in favour of his passion, he was more than ever respectful and complaisant; so that I found myself disengaged of all restraint, conducted the conversation, shortened and repeated my visits at my own pleasure, till at last I became so accustomed to this communication, that his house was as familiar to me as my own.

'Having in this manner fecured himself in my confidence, he resumed the savourite topick of love, and warming my imagination by gradual advances on the subject, my heart began to pant; when he saw me thus moved, he snatched the savourable occasion to practise all his eloquence and art. I could not resist his energy, nor even sly from the temptation that assailed me, until he had obtained a promise that he should, at our next meeting, reap the fruits of his tedious expectation.

Upon this condition I was permitted to retire; and bleffed Heaven for my escape, fully determined to continue in the path of virtue I had hitherto trod, and stifle the criminal slame, by which my peace and reputation were endangered. But his idea which reigned in my heart without controul, soon bassled all these prudent fuggestions.

'I faw him again; and he reminded me of my promife, which I endeavoured to evade with affected pleafantry; upon which he manifefted the utmost displeafure and chagrin, shedding some crocodile tears, and upbraiding me with levity and indifference. He observed, that he had solicited my favour for ten long months, without intermission, and imagined I had held out so long on virtuous motives only! but now he could plainly perceive that his want of success had been owing owing to my want of affection, and that all my professions were infincere; in a word, he persuaded me, that his remonstrances were just and reasonable. I could not see the affliction of a man I loved, when I knew it was in my power to remove it; and rather than forfeit his opinion of my sincerity and love, I consented to his wish. My heart now flutters at the remembrance of the dear, though fatal indifferction; yet I reseet without remorse, and even remember it with pleafure.

d

n

'If I could not avoid the censure of the world, I was refolved to bear it without repining; and fure the guilt (if there was any in my conduct) was but venial; for I confidered myfelf as a person absolved of all matrimonial ties, by the infignificance of Lord -, who, though a nominal husband, was in fact a mere non-entity, I therefore contracted a new engagement with my lover, to which I refolved to adhere with the most fcrupulous fidelity, without the least intention of injuring my lord or his relations; for had our mutual paffion produced any visible effects, I would immediately have renounced and abandoned my husband for ever, that the fruit of my love for Mr. S- might not have inherited to the detriment of the right heir. This was my determination, which I thought just, if not prudent; and for which I have incurred the imputation of folly, in the opinion of this wife and honest generation, by whose example and advice I have, fince that time, been a little reformed in point of prudentials, though I still retain a strong tendency to return to my primitive way of thinking.

'When I quitted Mr. S——, after the facrifice I had made, and returned to my own bed, it may perhaps be supposed that I slept but little. True: I was kept awake by the joyful impatience of revisiting my lover. Indeed, I neglected no opportunity of slying to his arms: when Lord —— was in the country, we enjoyed each other's company without interruption; but when he resided in town our correspondence was limited to stolen interviews, which were unspeakably delicious, as genuine love prefided at the entertainment.

Such was my happiness, in the course of this tender communication, that to this day I remember it with pleasure, though it has cost me dear in the sequel, and was at that time enjoyed at a confiderable expence; for I devoted myfelf fo entirely to my lover, who was desirous of engrossing my time and thoughts, that my acquaintance which was very numerous, justly accused me of neglect, and of consequence cooled in their friend thips; but I was all for love, or the world well loft. And were the fame opportunity to offer, I would act the fame conduct over again.

Some there are who possibly may wonder how I could love twice with fuch violence of affection; but all fuch observers must be unacquainted with the human heart. Mine was naturally adapted for the tender passions, and had been so fortunate, so cherished in it's first impressions, that it felt with joy the same sensations revive, when influenced by the fame engaging qualifications. Certain it is, I loved the fecond time as well as the first, and better was impossible. I gave up my all for both: fortune and my father's favour for the one; reputation, friends, and fortune, for the other. Yet, notwithstanding this intimate connection. I did not relinquish the world all at once; on the contrary, I still appeared at court, and attracted the notice and approbation of my royal patroness; I danced with the P--- of W---, a circumstance which so nearly affeeted Mr. S-, who was present, that, in order to manifest his refentment, he chose the ugliest woman in the ball for his partner; and I no fooner perceived his uneafiness than I gave over, with a view of appealing his displeasure.

Without repeating particular circumstances, let it fuffice to fay, our mutual passion was a perfect copy of that which had fubfifted between me and my dear Lord W--m. It was jealous, melting, and delicate, and chequered with little accidents, which ferve to animate and maintain the flame in it's first ardency of rapture. When my lover was fick, I attended and nursed him with indefatigable tenderness and care; and during an indisposition which I caught in the performance of this agreeable office, he discharged the obligation with all the warmth of fympathy and love.

It was, however, judged necessary by the physicians, that I should use the Bath waters for the recovery of my health; and I set out for that place, glad of a pretence to be absent from Lord —, with whom I lived on very unhappy terms. He had, about nine months after our marriage, desired that we might sleep in separate beds, and gave a very whimsical reason for this proposal. He said, the immensity of his love deprived him of the power of gratification, and that some commerce with an object, to which his heart was not attached, might, by diminishing the transports of his spirits, recompose his nerves, and enable him to enjoy the fruits of his good fortune.

'You may be fure I made no objections to this plan, which was immediately put in execution. He made his addresses to a nymph of Drury Lane, whose name (as he told me) was Mrs. Rock. She made shift to extract some money from her patient; but his infirmity was beyond the power of her art, though she made some mischief between us; and I communicated my suspicion to Duke H——, who intended to have expostulated with her upon the subject; but she got intimation of his design, and saved him the trouble by a precipitate retreat,

After my return from the Bath, where Mr. S—and I had lived happily, until we were interrupted by the arrival of my husband, his lordship expressed an inclination to be my bedfellow again. In this particular I desired to be excused. I would not be the first to propose the separation, which, though usual in other countries, is contrary to the custom of England, being unwilling to surnish the least handle for censure, as my character was still unblemished; yet, when the propofal came from him, I though myself entitled to refuse

H 3

a re-union, to which I accordingly objected.

This opposition produced a quarrel, which rose to a state of perpetual animosity; so that we began to talk of parting. My lord relished the expedient, agreeing to add three hundred pounds a year to my pin-money, which by the bye was never paid; and I renounced all state and grandeur, to live in a small house that I hired at Case Horton, where I passed my time for two months, in the most agreeable retirement, with my dear lover. At length I was disturbed by the intrusion of my lord, who molested me with visits and solicitations to return, pretending that he had changed his mind, and insisting upon my compliance with his desire.

'I exhausted my invention in endeavours to evade his request; but he persecuted me without ceasing: so that I was fain to capitulate, on condition that he should immediately set out for France; and that he should not presume to approach my bed till our arrival at Calais. We accordingly departed for that kingdom; and, far from infringing the least article of our treaty, his lordship did not insist on his privilege, before we reached the capital of France.

'Meanwhile, I began to feel the effect of my paffion in a very interesting manner, and communicated my discovery to the dear author of it, who would not leave me in such an affecting situation, but took the first opportunity of following us to France.

'In our road to Paris, we stopped to visit Chantilly, a magnificent chateau belonging to the Prince of Condé, and there met by accident with some English noblemen, to whom I was known. The prince and his sisters invited me very politely into the gallery where they sat. They complimented me on my person, and seemed to admire my dress, which was altogether new to them, being a blue English riding-habit trimmed with gold, and an hat with a feather. They were particularly well pleased with my hair, which hung down to my waist, and pressed me to stay a fortnight at their house;

house; an invitation which I was very much mortified at being obliged to refuse, because my lord did not understand the French language. I was inchanted with the place and the company, the women being amiable and the men polite; nor were they strangers to my name and story; for Mr. S—— calling at the same place a few days after, they rallied him on my account.

0

11

d

s,

r.

d,

n,

ıg

de

fo

he

he

ral

g-

ur

e-

af-

ed

ot

he

ly,

of

ifh

his

ere

ind

ew

ned

ar-

wn

eir

:;

When we arrived at Paris, the first thing I did was to metamorphose myself into a Frenchwoman. I cut off my hair; hid a very good complexion of my own with rouge: reconciled myself to powder, which I had never used before; put on a robe with a large hoop; and went to the Thuilleries sull of spirits and joy; for at that time every thing conspired to make me happy. I had health, youth, and beauty, love, vanity, and affluence, and found myself surrounded with diversions, which were gay, new, and agreeable. My apparance drew upon me the eyes of the whole company, who considered me as a stranger, but not a foreigner, so compleatly was I equipped in the fashion of the

according to their known politeness.
After having made a circuit round all the publick places of entertainment in Paris, I was introduced into company by an English family residing in that city; and, among others, became acquainted with a French lady, whose charms were remarkably attractive. The Duke of K—— was her admirer; but she lived in reputation with her mother and an agreeable sister, whose lover was the Prince of C—— (for almost every lady

French; and when they understood who I was, they applauded my person with the most lavish encomiums, in France has her aimant.)

With this charming woman, whose name was Madame De la T—, I often made parties of pleasure. The duke, Mr. S—, she and I, used to meet in the Bois de Boulogne, which is a pleasure wood at a small distance from Paris, whither the company repairs, in the summer-season, for the benefit of the air; and after housing having

having amused ourselves among the groves, embarked in his grace's equipage, which was extremely elegant, being a calash drawn by fix fine long-tailed greys, adorned with ribbands in the French tafte; and thus we were conducted to a little enchanted, or at least enchanting palace possessed by the duke, at one end of the town: the lower apartment, appropriated to me, was furnished with yellow and filver; the bed furrounded with looking-glaffes, and the door opened into the garden, laid out in a cradle-walk, and intervening parterres of roses and other flowers. Above stairs my female companion lodged, in a chamber furnished with chintz. We supped all together in the saloon, which, though fmall, was perfectly elegant. The company was always good-humoured, the conversation sprightly and joyous, and the scene, though often repeated, still delightful and entertaining,

'At other times, Mr. S—— and I used to pass our evenings at the palace of the Prince of C——, which his highness lent us for our accommodation. The apartments opened into the gardens of the Luxembourg, and were, in point of magnificence, suitable to the owner. Thither I used to repair in a staming equipage, on pretence of visiting, and spent the best part of the night with him, who was dearer to me than all the princes in the world.

While I was happily engaged in these ravishing parties, my little lord was employed in efforts to recover his health by restoratives, and I know not what, for he still lamented the enseebling effects of his passion, and complained, that he loved me more like an angel than a woman, though he strove to govern his affection according to the doctrines of the Christian religion, as he regulated his life by the maxims of Charles the Twelsth of Sweden. The meaning of this declaration I could never learn; and, indeed, I have been often tempted to believe he had no meaning at all.

Be that as it will, I found my fize vifibly increasing, and my situation extremely uneasy, on account of the perpetual

t

f

0

i

y

(

C

fa

m

ir

T al

de

pi

CC

le

di

ne of

clo

me

de

WI

thu

ten

COL

in

her

ing

perpetual wrangling which prevailed betwixt us, in confequence of his defiring to fleep with me again, after we had parted beds for the fecond time: and, that I might be no longer exposed to fuch disagreeable perfecutions, I resolved to leave him, though at the hazard of my life.

S

-

.

IS

d

r es

le

z.

1-

nd le-

ur

ich

rt-

ind

er,

ght

s in

ing

eco-

hat,

ngel

l, as

the

ation

often

fing,

of the

tual

'Thus determined, I went to the British ambassador in a hackney-coach; and, in order to difguife my youth, which might have prepoffessed him against my judgment, muffled myself up in a black hood, which (as he faid) instead of lending an air of gravity to my countenance, added a wildness to my looks, which was far from being difagreeable. He had been a gallant man in his youth; and even then, though well stricken in years, was not infensible to the power of beauty. This disposition, perhaps, rendered him more favourable to my cause, though he at first advised me to return to my husband; but finding me obstinate, he undertook to ferve me in my own way, and procure a protection from the French king, by virtue of which I could live at Paris unmolested by my lord. Nevertheless, he advised me (if I was determined to leave him) to make the best of my way to England, and fue for a divorce.

'I relished his opinion, and concealed myself about three days in Paris, during which I borrowed some linen: for, as it was impossible to convey any thing out of my own house without suspicion, I had neither cloaths for my accommodation, nor a servant to wait on me,

In this folitary condition I took the road to Flanders, after I had put my lord on a wrong fcent, by writing a letter to him, dated at Calais, and travelled through an unknown country, without any other attendant than the postillion, being subjected to this inconvenience by the laws of France, which are so severe in some particulars, that if any person had been apprehended with me, he would have suffered death, for going off with a man's wife, though any man might go to bed with the fame woman, without fear of incurring any legal punishmenr.

I proceeded night and day without intermission. that I might the fooner reach Flanders, where I knew I should be fafe; and as the nights were excessively cold, I was fain to wrap myself up in flannel, which I bought for the purpose, as I had no cloaths to keep me warm, and travelled in an open chaife. While we passed through dreary woods, quite remote from the habitations of men, I was not without apprehension of being stripped and murdered by the postillion; and in all probability, owed my fafety to the indigence of my appearance, which might also protect me in two miserable places where I was obliged to lie, before I got out of the territories of France: for, as I could not reach the great towns where I intended to lodge, I was under the necessity of putting up at little wretched hovels, where no provision was to be had, but four brown bread, and fourer cheefe: and every thing feemed to denote the dens of despair and affassination.

'I made shift, however, to subsist on this fare, uncomfortable as it was; consided in the meanness of my equipage for the security of my person; and at length arriving at Brussels, fixed my quarters in the Hotel de Flandre, (so well known to the English since) where I thought myself extremely happy in the accomplishment 1

P

C

u

P

ti

h

W

CC

lo m

be

ni

ge

20

of my flight.

'I had not been full two days in this place, when I was bleffed with the fight of my lover, who followed me on the wings of love, in purfuance of the plan we had projected before my departure from Paris. Here we concerted measures for proceeding to England. I hired a tall, fine Liegeoise, for a maid, and setting out for Ostend, we embarked in a vessel, in which Mr. Shad bespoke our passage. Our voyage was short and prosperous, and the time most agreeably spent in the company of my dear partner, who was a most engaging man in all respects, as I dare say my Lady O—— has since found him.

'I assumed

in Poland Street, retained lawyers, and commenced a fuit for separation against my lord. I communicated the reason of my elopement to my father, who was shocked and surprized at my conduct, which he condemned with expressions of sorrow and resemment. But the step was taken; nor did I repent of what I had done, except on his account.

ug.

m,

ew

elv

I

me

we

the

of

lin

my

ife-

got

not

was

ched

four

med

un-

fmy

ngth

el de ere I

ment

hen I

owed

an we

Here

1. I

ig out

t and

in the

gaging

- has

umed

'In the morning after my arrival at London, I waited upon the lord chief justice, to whom I complained of the usage I had received from my lord, whose temper was teazing, tiresome, and intolerably capricious. Indeed his behaviour was a strange compound of madness and folly, seasoned with a small proportion of fense: no wonder, then, that I who am hot and hafty, should be wretched, under the persecution of fuch a perverse humourist, who used to terrify me, and feeld at me the whole night without intermission, and shake my pillow from time to time, that I might not fleep, while he tormented me with his difagreeable expostulations. I have been often frightened almost out of my fenses, at seeing him convulsed with the most unreasonable passion; and chagrined to the highest degree of difgust, to find, (by repeated observation) his disposition so preposterous, that his satisfaction and displeasure never depended upon the cause he had to be satisfied or disobliged; but, on the contrary, when he had most reason to be pleased, he was always most discontented, and very often in good-humour, when he had reason enough for vexation.

'While I lived in Poland Street, I was engaged with lawyers, and so often visited by my father, that I could not dedicate my whole time, as usual, to my lover; nor was it convenient that he should be seen in my company; he therefore took a small house at Camberwell, whither I went as often as I had an opportunity; and maintained the correspondence with such eagerness and industry, that although I was six months gone with child, I have often, by myself, set out for his habitation in a hackney-coach at eleven o'clock at night, and returned by fix in the morning, that I might be in my own bed, when my father came to fee me; for I concealed my amour, as well as the effects of it, from his knowledge, and frequently took water from the Bridge, that my motions might not be discovered. Nothing but the most passionate love could have supported my spirits under such vicissitudes of fatigue, or enabled my admirer to spend whole days by himself in such a solitary retirement.

'By this time my lord was arrived in England, and employed in discovering the place of my retreat; so that I lived in continual alarm, and provided myself with a speaking trumpet, which stood by my bed-side, to be used in calling for affistance, in case my pursuer should make an attack upon my lodgings.

'This fituation being extremely uncomfortable, I had no fooner began my process against him, than I put myself entirely under the protection of Mr. S——, who conducted me to the house of a friend of his who lived in the country, where I was secure from the attempts of my husband.

'The world had now given me up, and I renounced the world with the most perfect resignation. I weighed in my own breast what I should lose in point of character, with what I suffered in my peace at home, and found, that my reputation was not to be preserved, except at the expence of my quiet, (for his lordship was not disposed to make me easy, had I been ever so discreet.) I therefore determined to give up a few ceremonial visits, and empty professions, for the more substantial enjoyments of life.

'We passed our time very agreeably, in various amusements, with this friend of Mr. S——, until the term of my reckoning was almost expired, then returned to London, and took lodgings in Southampton Street, where I began to make preparations for the approaching occasion. Here I proposed to live with the utmost circumspection. I disguised my name, saw nobody but my lawyer and lover, and never approached the window, left I should be discovered by accident.

'Notwithstanding these precautions, my French maid, whom I had fent for fome of my cloaths, was dogged in her return, and next morning my lord took my lodgings by ftorm. Had he given the affault in his own person only, I make no doubt but he would have fuffered a repulse, from the opposition of the Liegeoife, who made all the refistance in her power, but was obliged to give way to superior number.

'I was at that time a-bed, and hearing an unufual noise below, rung my bell, in order to know the cause of fuch diffurbance. I drew my curtain at the same time, and who should I see entering my chamber but his lordship, attended by a constable, and the footman who had discovered my retreat.

t

ıt

or

m

1e

0-

d

ed

a

nd

fo

lf

e,

er

I

ho

it-

ed

ed

C-

nd

X-

ras

if-

re-

ıb-

ous

the

ned

eet,

ch-

nost

but

ny

VOL. III.

Such an unexpected vifit could not fail to affect me with furprize and confternation: however, I fummoned all my fortitude to my aid, and perceiving the fellows were about to open my window-shutters, defired their principal to order them down stairs. He readily complied with my request, and fitting down by my bed-fide, told me with an air of triumph, that he had found me at last; and I frankly owned that I was heartily forry for his fuccess. Instead of upbraiding me with my escape, he proceeded to entertain me with all the news in town, and gave me a minute detail of every thing which had happened to him fince our parting; among other articles of intelligence, giving me to understand, that he had challenged Mr. S-, who refused to fight him, and was in difgrace with the Prince of W--- on that account.

But here his lordship did not strictly adhere to the naked truth: he had, indeed, before our departure from the country, gone to my lover, and infifted upon having fatisfaction in Hyde Park, two days from the date of his demand, and at three o'clock in the afternoon. S-, believing him in earnest, accepted the invitation, though he observed, that these affairs could not not be discussed too soon, and wished the time of meeting might be at an earlier hour. But his lordship did not chuse to alter the circumstances of his first proposal: and when he went away, said he should expect him at the appointed time and place, if it did not rain.

'His antagonist gave me an account of the convertation, when I affured him the business would end in smoke. Accordingly, my lord sent him a letter on Monday, desiring that the affignation might be deserred till Thursday, that he might have time to settle his affairs, and pay S—— an hundred pounds, which he had formerly borrowed of him. When Thursday came, he was favoured with another epistle, importing, that the challenger had changed his mind, and would seek satisfaction at law. Thus ended that heroick exploit, which his lordship now boasted of with such arrogant misrepresentation.

While he regaled me with these interesting particulars, I was contriving a scheme to frustrate the discovery he had made: so that I did not contradict his assertions: but told him, that if he would go down stairs, I would rise and come to breakfast. He consented to this proposal with great chearfulness; and I own, I was not a little surprized to find him, at this first interview, in as good a humour, as if nothing had happened to interrupt the selicity of our matrimonial union.

'It cost me some invention to conceal my condition from his notice, being now within a week of the expected criss; but I knew I had to do with a man of no great penetration, and succeeded in my attempt accordingly. We breakfasted with great harmony, and I invited him to dinner, after having prevailed upon him to fend away his myrmidons, whom, nevertheless, he ordered to return at eleven o'clock at night. We conversed together with great gaiety and mirth. When I rallied him for visiting me in such a dishabille, he stood a tiptoe to view himself in the glass; and owning I was in the right, said he would go and dress himself before dinner.

· He accordingly went away, charging my maid to give him entrance at his return; and he was no fooner gone than I wrote to Mr. S--, giving him an account of what had happened. Then, without having determined upon any certain plan, I huddled on my cloaths, muffled myfelf up, and calling a chair, went to the next tavern, where I stayed no longer than was fufficient to change my vehicle; and, to the aftonishment of the drawers, who could not conceive the meaning of my perturbation, proceeded to a shop in the neighbourhood, where I difmiffed my fecond chair, and procured a hackney coach, in which I repaired to the lodgings of my lawyer, whom I could trust. Having made him acquainted with the circumstances of my diffress, and consulted him about a proper place of retreat, after some recollection he directed me to a little house in a court, to which, by the affistance of my lover, my woman and cloaths were fafely conveyed that fame evening.

'My lord, however, came to dinner, according to invitation, and did not feem at all alarmed when my maid told him I was gone; but stepped to my lawyer, to know if he thought I should return. Upon his answering in the affirmative, and advising his lordship to go back in the mean time, and eat the dinner I had provided, he very deliberately took his advice, made a very hearty meal, drank his bottle of wine, and as I did not return according to his expectation, withdrew, in order to confult his affociates.

d

)-

n

r-

in

n

ris

he

e,

at

t,

nt

u-

0-

'S,

to

I

er-

ied

on St-

eat y.

im

ay

ier

for

ht,

to

'This motion of his furnished my woman with an opportunity of making her retreat; and when he returned at night, the coast was clear, and he found nobody in the house but a porter, who had been left to take care of the furniture. He was so enraged at this disappointment, that he made a furious noise, which raised the whole neighbourhood, reinforced his crew with the authority of a justice of the peace, tarried in the street till three o'clock in the morning, discharged a lodging he had hired at a barber's shop opposite to the house from which I had escaped, and retired with the comfortable reflection of having done every thing which man could do to retrieve me.

'The hurry of spirits and surprize I had undergone in effecting this retreat, produced such a disorder in my constitution, that I began to fear I should be delilivered before I could be provided with necessaries for the occasion. I fignified my apprehension to Mr. Swho, with infinite care and concern, endeavoured to find a more convenient place; and, after all his enquiries, was obliged to fix upon a paltry apartment in the city, though his tenderness was extremely shocked at the necessity of chusing it. However, there was no remedy, nor time to be loft: to this miferable habitation I was conveyed in a hackney coach; and though ex. tremely ill, bore my fate with spirit and resignation, in testimony of my sincere and indelible attachment to my lover, for whose ease and pleasure I could have suffered every inconvenience, and even facrificed my life.

'Immediately after I had taken possession of my wretched apartment, I was constrained by my indispotion to go to bed, and send for the necessary help; and in a few hours a living pledge of my love and indiscretion saw the light; though the terrors and satigue I had undergone had affected this little innocent to severely, that it scarce discovered any visible signs of life.

'My grief at this misfortune was inexpressible; I forthwith dispatched a message to the dear, the anxions father, who slew to my arms, and shared my forrow, with all the gentleness of love and parental fondness; yet our fears were (for that time) happily disappointed by the recovery of our infant daughter, who was committed to the care of a nurse in the neighbourhood; so that I could every day be satisfied in my enquiries about her health. Thus I continued a whole formight in a state of happiness and tranquillity, being blessed with the conversation and tender offices of my admirer, whose love and attention I wholly engrossed. In a word, he gave up all business and amusement, and concentered centered all his care and affiduity in ministering to my ease and satisfaction. And sure I had no cause to regret what I had fuffered on his account!

But this my agreeable fituation was one day difturbed by a most alarming accident, by which my life was drawn into imminent danger. The room under my bed-chamber took fire; I immediately finelled it, and faw the people about me in the utmost perplexity and consternation, though they would not own the true cause of their confusion, lest my health should suffer in the fright. Nevertheless, I was so calm in my enquiries, that they ventured to tell me my fuspicion was but too just; upon which I gave such directions as would fecure me from catching cold, in case there should be a necessity for removing me; but the fire being happily extinguished, I escaped that ceremony, which might have cost me my life. Indeed it was surprizing, that the agitation of my spirits did not produce some fatal effect upon my constitution; and I looked upon my deliverance as the protection of a particular Providence.

'Though I escaped the hazard of a sudden removal, I found it was high time to change my lodgings, because the neighbours rushing into the house upon the alarm of fire, had discovered my situation, though they were ignorant of my name; and I did not think myself safe in being the subject of their conjectures. Mr. S—— therefore procured another apartment, with better accommodation, to which I was carried as soon as my health would admit of my removal; and soon after my lord wrote to me by the hands of my lawyer, earnestly entreating me to drop my prosecution, and come home. But I would not comply with his request; and nothing was farther from my intention than the desire of receiving any fayours at his hands.

'Thus repulsed, he set on foot a most accurate research for my person; in the course of which he is said to have detected several ladies and young girls, who had reasons for keeping themselves concealed; and had like to have been very feverely handled for his impertinent curiofity. Being unfuccefsful in all his attempts, he entered into a treaty with Sir R—H—, a person of a very indifferent character, who undertook to furnish him with an infallible expedient to discover the place of my abode, if he would gratify him with a bond for a thousand pounds; which being executed accordingly, this worthy knight advertised me and my maid in the publick papers, offering one hundred pounds as a reward to any person who should disclose the place of our retirement.

'As foon as the paper fell into my hands, I was again involved in perplexity; and being afraid of flaying in town, refolved, with the concurrence of my lover, to accept of an invitation I had received from the Duke of K, who had by this time arrived in England, with that lady whom I have already mentioned, as one of our parties at Paris. Having visited my little infant, I next day fet out for the duke's country-feat, which is a most elegant chateau, and stands in a charming fituation. Mr. S--- followed in a few days; we met with a very cordial reception; his grace was civil and good-natured, lived nobly, and loved pleafure. Madame La T-was formed to please; there was always a great deal of good company in the house: so that we paffed our time agreeably in playing at billiards, and cards, hunting, walking, reading, and conversation.

'But my terms of happiness were generally of short duration. In the midst of this selicity I was overtaken by a most severe affliction, in the death of my dear haples infant, who had engrossed a greater share of my tenderness, than perhaps I even should have paid to the offspring of a legitimate contract, because the circumstance of her birth would have been an insurmountable misfortune to her through the whole course of her life, and rendered her absolutely dependent on my love and protection.

Whilft I still lamented the untimely fate of this fair bloffom, Lord — came down, and demanded me as his wife; but the fuit which I then maintained against him deprived him, for the present, of a husband's right; and therefore the duke would not deliver me into his hands.

In fix months he repeated his vifit and demand; and an agreement was patched up, in confequence of which I confented to live in the fame house with him, on condition that he should never desire to sleep with me, or take any other measure to disturb my peace; otherwise I should be at liberty to leave him again, and entitled to the provision of a separate maintenance. To these articles I assented, by the advice of my lawyers, with a view of obtaining my pin-money, which I had never received since our parting, but subsisted on the sale of my jewels, which were very considerable, and had been presented to me with full power of alienation. As to my lover, he had no fortune to support me, and for that reason I was scrupulously cautious of augmention his expression menting his expence.

k

er

a c-

Y

de

as

y-

r,

ke

d,

ne

17-

at,

m-

we

vil

re.

vas

fo

ds,

fa-

ort

cen

ap-

en-

the

ım-

ife,

and

this

air

We had now enjoyed each other's company for three years, during which our mutual passion had suffered no abatement, nor had my happiness been mixed with any confiderable allay, except that late stroke of Providence which I have already mentioned, and the reflection of the forrow that my conduct had entailed upon my dear father, whom I loved beyond expression, and whom nothing could have compelled me to difoblige, but a more powerful flame, that prevailed over every other confideration. As I was now forced to break off this enchanting correspondence, it is not to be doubted that our parting coft us the most acute sensations of grief and disappointment. However, there was no remedy: I tore myfelf from his arms, took my leave of the family, after having acknowledged my obligations to the duke, and fet out for the place of rendezvous; where I was met by my lord, attended by a fleward whom he had lately engaged, and who was one chief cause of our future separations. My lord having quitted quitted his house in town, conducted me to his ledgings in Pall Mall, and insisted upon sleeping with me the first night; but I resused to gratify his desire, on the authority of our agreement.

'This dispute produced a quarrel, in consequence of which I attempted to leave the house. He endeavouring to prevent my retreat, I fairly locked him in, ran down stairs, and calling a hackney-coach, made the best of my way into the city, to my father's lodgings, where I lay, the family being in town, though he himself was in the country. I wrote to him immediately, and when he came to London, declared my intention of separating from my lord; in which, seeing me obstinate and determined, he at length acquiesced, and a formal separation actually ensued, which at that time I thought binding and immutable.

ti

h

h

h

ti

ra

fo

m

of

flo

m

I a

al

w enj

coi

cha

not

tha

for

to l

him

myi

form

Iw

'I was now sheltered under the wings of an indulgent father, who had taken me into favour again, on the supposition that my commerce with Mr.'S—— was absolutely at an end. Nevertheless though we had separated, in all appearance for ever, we had previously agreed to maintain our correspondence in private interviews, which should escape the notice of the world, with which I was again obliged to keep some mea-

fures.

Our parting at the Duke of K—'s house in the country was attended with all the genuine marks of sincere and reciprocal affection, and I lived in the sweet hope of seeing him again, in all the transports of his former passion; when my lawyer, who received my letters, brought me a billet one night, just as I had gone to bed. Seeing the superscription of S—'s hand-writing, I opened it with all the impatience of an absent lover: but how shall I describe the astonishment and consternation with which I was seized, when I perused the contents! Instead of the most tender vows and protestations, this state epistle began with Madam, the best thing you can do is to return to your father: or some cold and killing expression, to that effect,

Heaven and earth! what did I feel at this dire conjuncture! The light forfook my eyes; a cold fweat bedewed my limbs; and I was overwhelmed with fuch a torrent of forrow and furprize, that every body prefent believed I would have died under the violent agitation. They endeavoured to support my spirits with repeated draughts of strong liquor, which had no sensible effect upon my constitution, though for eight whole years I had drank nothing stronger than water; and I must have infallibly perished in the first extaly of my grief, had it not made its way in a fit of tears and exclamation, in which I continued all night, to the amazement of the family, whom my condition had alarmed, and raised from their repose. My father was the only perfon who gueffed the cause of my affliction: he faid he was fure I had received fome ill usage in a letter or message from that rascal S-, (so he termed him, in the bitterness of passion.)

At mention of that name my agony redoubled to fuch a degree, that all who were present wept at fight of my deplorable condition. My poor father shed a flood of tears, and conjured me to tell him the cause of my disquiet; upon which, rather than confess the truth. I amused his concern by pretending that my lover was The whole family having flayed by me till I was a little more composed, left me to the care of my maid, who put me into bed about fix in the morning; but I enjoyed no rest: I revolved every circumstance of my conduct, endeavouring to find out the cause of this fatal change in S-'s disposition; and as I could recollect nothing which could justly give offence, concluded that fome malicious persons had abused his ears with fories to my prejudice.

'With this conjecture I got up, and fent my lawyer to him with a letter, wherein I infifted upon feeing him, that I might have an opportunity of justifying myself in person; a task which would be easily performed, as I had never offended, but in loving too well.

I waited with the most anxious impatience for the re-

or fome Teaven

ie

of

1-

an

he

gs,

ra-

ly,

of

Atil a

ime

lul-

, on

was

l fe-

oufly

nter-

orld,

mea-

n the

ks of

fweet of his

d my

I had

of an

hment

I pews and

am, the turn of my messenger, who brought me an answer couched in the coldest terms of civility which indisference could dictate; acknowledging, however, that he had nothing to lay to my charge, but that it was for the good of us both we should part. He ought to have reslected on that before, not after I had sacrificed my all for his love. I was well nigh distracted by this confirmation of his inconstancy; and I wonder to this day how I retained the use of reason, under such circumstances of horror and despair. My grief laid aside all decorum and restraint; I told my father that Swas dying, and that I would visit him with all expedition.

'Startled at the propofal, this careful parent demonstrated the fatal confequence of fuch an ungrateful ftep, reminded me of the difficulty with which he had prevailed upon my mother and uncle to forgive my former imprudence, observed that his intention was to carry me into the country next day, in order to effect a perfect reconciliation; but now I was on the brink of forfeiting all pretentions to their regard, by committing another fatal error, which could not possibly be retrieved; and that for his part, whatever pangs it might cost him, he was resolved to banish me from his fight for ever.

a

p

n

al

W

to

I

hi

an

S-

len

80 wa

tole

out

in a

flict

.

down his cheeks, and he seemed overwhelmed with the keenest forrow and mortification; so it may be easily conceived what were the impressions of my grief, reinforced with the affliction of a father whom I dearly loved, and the consciousness of being the cause of all his disquiet! I was struck dumb with remorse and woe; and when I recovered the use of speech, I told him how sensible I was of his great goodness and humanity, and owned how little I deserved his favour and affection; that the sense of my own unworthiness was one cause of my present distraction; for such was the condition of my fate, that I must either see S—— of die. I said, though I could not expect his forgiveness.

ver

fer-

he

for

to

iced

this

this

cir-

afide

pedi-

mon-

ftep,

l pre-

ormer

carry

a per-

of for-

nitting

etriev-

ht coft

tht for

rickled

rith the

e eafily

f, rein-

dearly

e of all

rfe and

I told

I huma-

our and

ness was

was the

givenels

I was

affured

I was furely worthy of his compassion; that nothing but the most irresultible passion could have missed me at first from my duty, or tempted me to incur the least degree of his displeasure; that the same fatal influence still prevailed, and would, in all probability, continue to the grave, which was the only abode in which I hoped for peace.

While I expressed myself in this manner, my dear good father wept with the most tender sympathy; and saying I might do as I pleased, for he had done with me, quitted the room, leaving me to the cruel sensations of my own heart, which almost bursted with anguish, upbraiding me with a fault which I could not help committing.

'I immediately hired a chariot and fix, and would have fet out by myfelf, had not my father's affection, which all my errors could not efface, provided an attendant. He faw me quite delirious and defperate; and therefore engaged a relation of my own to accompany and take care of me in this raft expedition.

During this journey, which lasted two days, I selt no remission of grief and anxiety, but underwent the most intolerable forrow and suspense: at last we arrived at a little house, called the Hut, on Salisbury Plain, where, in the most frantick agitation, I wrote a letter to S—, describing the miserable condition to which I was reduced by his unkindness, and desiring to see him, with the most earnest solicitations.

'This billet I committed to the care of my attendant, and laid strong injunctions upon him to tell Mr. S—, my injuries were so great, and my despair so violent, that if he did not favour me with a viiit, I would go to him, though at his sister's house, where he then was.

'He received my message with great coldness, and told my friend, that if I would return to London without infisting upon the interview I demanded, he would in a little time follow me to town, and every thing should be amicably adjusted; but when the messager affured him, that I was too much transported with grief to hear of such a proposal, he consented to meet me in the middle of Salisbury Plain, that we might avoid all observation: and though I was little able to walk, I set out on foot for the place of afsignation, my companion following at a small distance.

When I faw him leading his horse down the hill, I collected all my fortitude, and advanced to him with all the speed I could exert; but when I made an effort to speak, my tongue denied its office; and so lively was the expression of unutterable forrow in my countenance, that his heart (hard as it was) melted at fight of my fufferings, which he well knew proceeded from the fincerity of my love. At length I recovered the use of speech, enough to tell him, that I was come to take my leave; and when I would have proceeded, my voice failed me again: but, after a considerable paule, I found means, with great difficulty, to let him know how fensible I was of my own incapacity to retrieve his loft affections: but that I was willing (if possible) to retain his effeem, of which, could I be affured, I would endeavour to compose myself; that I was determined to leave the kingdom, because I could not bear the fight of those places where we had been so happy in our mutual love; and that, till my departure, I hoped he would visit me sometimes, that I might, by degrees, wean myself from his company; for I thould not be able to furvive the shock of being deprived of him all at once.

'This address may seem very humble to an unconcerned observer; but love will tame the proudest dispessition, as plainly appeared in my case; for I had naturally as much spirit, or more, than the generality of people have. Mr. S—— was so much consounded at the manner of my behaviour, that he scarce knew what answer to make; for (as he afterwards owned) he expected to hear himself upbraided; but he was not proof against my tenderness. After some hesitation, he said he never meant to forsake me entirely, that his affection

d

I

e

m

I

tl

de

fh

he

be

tis

was still unimpaired, and that he would follow me directly to London. I imposed upon myself, and believed what he said, because I could not bear to think of parting with him for ever, and returned to town in a more tranquil state of mind than that in which I had left my father, though my heart was far from being at ease; my fears being ingenious enough to foresee, that I should never be able to oversome his indifference.

'I took lodgings in Mount Street; and my maid having disposed of herself in marriage, hired another, who supplied her place very much to my satisfaction: she was a good girl, had a particular attachment to me, and for many years, during which she lived in my service, was indefatigably assiduous in contributing to my ease; or rather, in alleviating my affliction: for, though s— came up to town according to promise, and renewed a fort of correspondence with me for the space of five months, his complaisance would extend no farther; and he gave me to understand, that he had determined to go abroad with Mr. V—, whom he accordingly accompanied in his envoying to D——n.

'I understood the real cause of this expedition, which, notwithstanding his oaths and protestations of unabated love and regard, I construed into a palpable mark of dislike and disrespect; nor could the repeated assurances I received from him in letters, mitigate the anguish and mortification that preyed upon my heart. I therefore gave up all hopes of recovering the happiness I had lost: I told him on the eve of his departure, that he might exercise his gallantry a great while, before he would meet with my fellow in point of sincerity and love; for I would rather have been a servant in his house, with the privilege of seeing him, than the Queen of England debarred of that pleasure.

When he took his leave, and went down stairs, I shrunk at every step he made, as if a new wound had been inflicted upon me; and when I heard the door shut behind him, my heart died within me. (I had the satisfaction to hear afterwards, he lamented the loss of

VOL. III.

ef

A

11

1

n-

, I

th

ort

ly

te-

relat

mo

the

to

my

ufe,

WOL

ieve

bl.)

I, I

ter-

bear

ppy

e, I

, by

ouid

ed of

icon-

lipe-

I na-

ity of

led at

what he ex-

proci

e faid

action

was

me prodigiously, and that he had never been so happy since.) I sat down to write a letter, in which I forgave his indifference, because I knew the affections are altogether involuntary, and wished him all the happiness he deserved. I then walked up and down the room in the most restless anxiety, was put to bed by my maid, rose at six, mounted my horse, and rode forty miles, in order to satigue myself, that I might next night enjoy some repose. This exercise I daily underwent for months together; and when it did not answer my purpose, I used to walk round Hyde Park in the evening, when the place was quite solitary, and unvisited by any other human creature.

In the course of this melancholy perambulation, I was one day accosted by a very great man, who, after the first falutation, asked whether or not my intercourse with S—— was at an end; and if I had any allowance from my husband. To the first of these questions, I replied in the affirmative; and to the last answered, that my lord did not allow me a great deal; indeed I might have truly faid nothing at all, but I was too proud to own my indigence. He then expressed his wonder, how one like me, who had bee I used to fplendour and affluence from my cradle, could make shift to live in my present narrow circumstances; and when I told him that I could make a very good shift, so I had peace, he feemed to lament my fituation, and very kindly invited me to fup with his wife at his house. accepted the invitation, without any apprehension of the consequence; and when I went to the place, was introduced into an apartment, magnificently lighted up, I suppose, for my reception.

'After I had stayed alone for some time in this mysterious situation, without seeing a living soul, my inviter appeared, and said, he hoped I would not take it amiss, that he and I were to sup by ourselves, as he had something to say, which could not be so properly communicated before company or servants. I then, for the first time, perceived his drift, to my no small

furprize

furprize and indignation; and with evident marks of displeasure told him, I was sure he had nothing to propose that would be agreeable to my inclination, and that I would immediately leave the house. Upon which he gave me to understand, that I could not possibly retire, because he had sent away my chair, and all his servants were disposed to obey his orders.

1

er

ce

Í

d,

00

is

n-

to

I

ad

ry

of

vas

ip,

vf-

in-

e it

he

rly

en,

nall

ze

' Incenfed at this declaration, which I confidered as an infult, I answered with an air of resolution, it was very well; I despised his contrivance, and was afraid of nobody. Seeing me thus alarmed, he affured me I had no reason to be afraid; that he had loved me long, and could find no other opportunity of declaring his passion. He said, the queen had told him, that Lord - had renewed his addresses to me; and as he understood from my own mouth, my correspondence with S—— was absolutely broke off, he thought himself as well intitled as another to my regard. In conclusion, he told me, that I might command his purse, and that he had power enough to bring me into the world again with éclat. To these advances I replied, that he was very much mistaken in his opinion of my character, if he imagined I was to be won by any temptations of fortune; and very frankly declared, that I would rather give myself to a footman, than sell myself to a prince.

"Supper being ferved, we fat down together; but I would neither eat nor drink any thing, except a little bread and water; for I was an odd whimfical girl; and it came into my head, that he might, perhaps, have mixed fomething in the victuals or wine, which would alter my way of thinking. In fhort, finding himfelf baffled in all his endeavours, he permitted me about twelve o'clock to depart in peace, and gave up his fuit, as a desperate cause.

This uncomfortable life did I lead for a whole twelvemonth, without feeling the least abatement of my melancholy. Finding myself worn to a skeleton, I refuned my former resolution of trying to profit by K2 change change of place, and actually went abroad with no other attendant but my woman, and the utmost indifference for life. My intention was to have gone to the fouth of France, where I thought I could have subsisted on the little I had left, which amounted to five hundred pounds, until the issue of my law-suit, by which I hoped to obtain some provision from my lord; and, without all doubt, my expectation would have been answered, had I put this my plan in execution: but being at Paris, from whence I proposed to set forward in a few days, I sent to M. K——, who had been formerly intimate with my father, and shewn me many civilities during my first residence in France.

'This gentleman favoured me with a vifit, and when I made him acquainted with my scheme, disfuaded me from it, as an uncomfortable determination. He advised me to stay at Paris, where with good economy, I could live as cheap as in any other place, and enjoy the conversation and countenance of my friends, among which number he declared himself one of the most faithful. He affured me, that I should be always welcome to his table, and want for nothing. He promifed to recommend me as a lodger to a friend of his, with whom I would live in a frugal and decent manner; and observed that, as the woman was well known and esteemed by all the English company in Paris, it would be the most reputable step I could take, considering my youth and fituation, to lodge with a creditable person. who could answer for my conduct. Thus perfuaded. I very fimply followed his advice; I fay, fimply, because, notwithstanding his representations, I soon found my money melt away, without any prospect of a fresh fupply. In lieu of this, however, I passed my time very agreeably in feveral English, and some French families; where, in a little time, I became quite intimate, faw a great deal of company, and was treated with the utmost politeness and regard: yet, in the midft of these pleasures, many a melancholy sigh would rife at the remembrance of my beloved S--, whom, for for feveral years, I could not recollect without emotion; but time, company, amusements, and change of place, in a great measure diffipated these ideas, and enabled me to bear my fate with patience and refigna-

tion.

le

d

d

d

ıt

1,

at

W

1-

28

'n ne

1-

y,

y

ig

1-

ed

th

nd

nd

ld

ny

n, d,

end

fh

ne a-

ti-

ed

he

ıld

m,

A,

On my last arrival at Paris, I was surrounded by a crowd of professed admirers, who sighed and flattered in the usual forms; but, besides that my heart was not yet in a condition to contract new engagements, I was prepoffessed against them all, by supposing that they prefumed upon the knowledge of my indifcretion with S-; and therefore rejected their addresses with detestation and disdain; for, as I have already observed, I was not to be won, but by the appearance of efteem and the most respectful carriage; and though, by a faife step, I had, in my own opinion, forfeited my title to the one, I was refolved to discourage the advances of any man who feemed deficient in the other.

In this manner my lovers were, one by one, repulfed, almost as foon as they presented themselves, and I preferved the independence of my heart, until I became acquainted with a certain peer, whom I often faw at the house of Mrs. P-, an English lady then resident at Paris. This young nobleman professed himself deeply enamoured of me, in a ftyle so different from that of my other admirers, that I heard his protestations without difguft; and though my inclinations were still free, could not find in my heart to discountenance his addresses, which were preferred with the most engaging modefty, difinterestedness, and respect.

By these never-failing arts, he gradually conquered my indifference, and gained the preference in my effects from Lord C--y and the Prince of C--, who were at that time his rivals. But what contributed (more than any confideration) to his fuccefs, was his declaring openly, that he would marry me without hefitation, as foon as I could obtain a divorce from my prefent hufband, which, in all probability, might have been eafily procured; for before I left England, Lord -- had offered

K 3

offered me five thousand pounds, if I would consent to such a mutual release, that he might be at liberty to espouse one Miss W—— of Kent, to whom he then made love upon honourable terms: but I was fool enough to refuse his proposal, by the advice of S——; and whether or not his lordship, finding it impracticable to wed his new mistress, began to make love upon another footing, I know not; but certain it is, the mother forbade him the house, a circumstance which he took so heinously ill, that he appealed to the world in a publick advertisement, beginning with, "Whereas, for some time, I have passionately loved Miss W——, and upon my not complying with the mother's proposals, they have turned me out of doors; this is to justify," &c.

'This declaration, figned with his name, was actually printed in a number of detached advertisements, which he ordered to be distributed to the publick; and afterwards, being convinced by some of his friends, that he had done a very filly thing, he recalled them at half a guinea a-piece. A copy of one of them was sent to me at Paris; and I believe my father has now one of the originals in his possession. After this wise vindication of his conduct, he made an attempt to carry off the lady from church by force of arms; but she was rescued by the neighbours, headed by her brother, who being an attorney, had like to have made his lordship finart severely for this exploit.

'Meanwhile my new admirer had made some progress in my heart; and my finances being exhausted, I was reduced to the alternative of returning to Lord—again, or accepting Earl B—'s love. When my affairs were brought to that iffue, I made no hesitation in my choice, putting myself under the protection of a man of honour, whom I esteemed, rather than suffer every fort of mortification from a person who was the object of my abhorrence and contempt. From a mistaken pride, I chose to live in Lord B—'s house, rather than be maintained at his expence in any other place.

place. We fpent feveral months agreeably in balls and other diversions, visited Lord B--k, who lived at the distance of a few leagues from Paris, and stayed some days at his house, where the entertainment was, in all respects, delightful, elegant, and refined. Their habitation was the rendezvous of the best company in France; and Lady B—k maintained the fame superiority in her own fex, for which her lord is so justly diftinguished among the men.

to

n

oľ

.;

a-

n

0he

in

s,

0-

ıf-

u-

ts,

nd

nat

alf to

of

di-

off

vas vho

hip

ro-1, I

af-

tion

of a iffer

the mif-

rather

ce.

About Christmas we set out for England, accompanied by a little North Briton, who lived with Lord B—— as his companion, and did not at all approve of our correspondence; whether out of real friendskip for his patron, or apprehension that in time I might superfede his own influence with my lord, I shall not pretend to determine. Be that as it will, the frost was so severe, that we were detained ten days at Calais, before we could get out of the harbour; and during that time, I reflected feriously on what my new lover had proposed: as he was very young, and unacquainted with the world, I thought my ftory might have escaped him; and therefore determined to give him a faithful detail of the whole, that he might not have any thing to reproach me with in the fequel: belides, I did not think it honest to engage him to do more for me than he might afterwards, perhaps, think I was worth. Accordingly, I communicated to him every particular of my life; and the narration, far from altering his fentiments, rather confirmed his good opinion, by exhibiting an undoubted proof of my frankness and fincerity. In short, he behaved with such generosity, as made an absolute conquest of my heart: but my love was of a different kind from that which had formerly reigned within my breaft, being founded upon the warmest gratitude and esteem, exclusive of any other consideration, though his person was very agreeable, and his address engaging.

When we arrived in England, I went directly to his country-feat, about twelve miles from London,

where

where he foon joined me, and we lived fome time in perfect retirement, his relations being greatly alarmed with the apprehension that Lord —— would bring an action against him; though he himself desired nothing more, and lived so easy under that expectation, that they soon laid aside their fears on his account.

'We were vifited by Mr. H-B-, a relation of my lord, and one Mr. R-of the guards; who, with the little Scotchman and my lover, made an agreeable fet, among whom I enjoyed hunting, and all manner of country diversions. As to Mr. H—— B——, if ever there was a perfection in one man, it centered in him; or at least, he, of all the men I ever knew, approached nearest to that idea which I had conceived of a perfect character. He was both good and great, poffessed an uncommon genius, and the best of hearts. Mr. R- was a very fociable man, had a good person and cultivated understanding; and my lord was excessively good-humoured; fo that, with fuch companions, no place could be infipid or dull: for my own part, I conducted the family; and as I endeavoured to please and make every body happy, I had the good fortune to fucceed. Mr. B -- told me, that before he faw me, he heard I was a fool; but finding (as he was pleased to fay) that I had been egregiously misrepresented, he courted my friendship, and a correspondence commenced between us: indeed, it was impossible for any person to know him, without entertaining the utmost esteem and veneration for his virtue.

'After I had lived fome time in this agreeable retreat, my husband began to make a buftle; he fent a message, demanding me from Lord B——; then came in person, with his night-cap in his pocket, intending to have stayed all night, had he been asked, and attended by a relation, whom he assured that I was very fond of him, and detained by force from his arms.

'Finding himself disappointed in his expectations, he commenced a law-suit against Lord E——, though not for a divorce, as we desired, but with a view to reclaim

me

ten

tor

we

or

tre

pla

frie

hin

me

tion

of 1

cer

of i

ten

life

who

all I

whi

not

bed

was

W

by 1

nefs

Lor

Inc

an

difa

left

ing

my

oper

ber,

the :

was

me as his lawful wife. His lawyers, however, attempted to prove criminal conversation, in hopes of exterting money from my lover; but their endeavours were altogether fruitless; for no servant of Lord B—'s or mine could with justice say, we were ever seen to trespass against modesty and decorum; so that the plaintiff was nonsuited.

n

e,

n

on

0,

e-

n-

-,

in ip-

of

of-

Ar.

and

ely

no

on-

and

uc-

, he

d to

he

aced

rfon

eem

rent a

ame

ding

end-

fond

is, he

h not claim

'While this cause was depending, all my lover's friends expressed fear and concern for the issue, while he himself behaved with the utmost resolution, and gave me such convincing proofs of a strong and steady affection, as augmented my gratitude, and rivetted the ties of my love, which was unblemished, faithful, and sincere.

'Soon after this event, I was feized with a violent fit of illness, in which I was visited by my father, and attended by two physicians, one of whom despaired of my life, and took his leave accordingly; but Dr. S---, who was the other, perfifted in his attendance, and in all human appearance faved my life; a circumstance by which he acquired a great share of reputation: yet, notwithstanding all his affistance, I was confined to my bed for ten weeks; during which, Lord B--'s grief was immoderate, his care and generofity unlimited. While I lay in this extremity, Mr. S-, penetrated by my melancholy condition, which revived his tendernels, begged leave to be admitted to my presence; and Lord B—— would have complied with his request, had I not been judged too weak to bear the shock of such an interview. My constitution, however, agreeably disappointed their fears; and the fever had no sooner left me, than I was removed to a hunting-feat belonging to my lover, from whence, after I had recovered my strength, we went to B—— Castle, where we kept open house: and while we remained at this place, Lord B--- received a letter from Lord ---, dated November, challenging him to fingle combat in May, upon the frontiers of France and Flanders. This defiance was fent in consequence of what had passed betwixt them long before my indisposition, at a meeting in a certain tavern, where they quarrelled, and in the fray my lover threw his antagonist under the table. I counfelled him to take no notice of this rhodomontade, which I knew was void of all intention of performance; and he was wise enough to follow my advice; resolved, however, should the message be repeated, to take the challenger at his word.

a

f

t

e

h

H

in

b

er

fig

tv

m

na

ne

pr

an

in

fhi

he

bu

my

ha

pol

had

not

for

my

wh

cha

thi

me

min

'Having refided some time in this place, we returned to the other country house which he had left, where Lord B—— addicted himself so much to hunting, and other male diversions, that I began to think he neglected me, and apprized him of my suspicion; assuming him, at the same time, that I would leave him as soon as my opinion should be confirmed.

'This declaration had no effect upon his behaviour, which became fo remarkably cold, that even Mr. R-, who lived with us, imagined that his affection was palpably diminished. When I went to town, I was usually attended by his cousin, or this gentleman, or both, but feldom favoured with his company; nay, when I repaired to Bath, for the re-establishment of my health, he permitted me to go alone, fo that I was quite perfuaded of his indifference; and yet I was miftaken in my opinion: but I had been spoiled by the behaviour of my first husband, and Mr. S-, who never quitted me for the fake of any amusement, and often refifted the calls of the most urgent business rather than part from me, though but for a few hours. I thought every man who loved me truly, would act in the fame manner; and whether I am right or wrong in my conjectures, I leave wifer cafuifts to judge. Certain it is, fuch facrifice and devotion is the most pleasing proof of an admirer's paffion; and voyez moi plus souvent, & ne me donnez rien, is one of my favourite maxims. A man may give money, because he is profuse; he may be violently fond, because he is of a sanguine constitution; but if he gives me his time, he gives an unqueltionable proof of my being in full possession of his heart, · My

My appearance at Bath, without the company of Lord B ---, occasioned a general surprize, and encouraged the men to pefter me with addresses; every new admirer endeavouring to advance his fuit, by demonfirating the unkind and difrespectful behaviour of his fordship. Indeed, this was the most effectual string they could touch: my pride and refentment were alarmed, and I was weak enough to liften to one man, who had like to have infinuated himfelf into my inclinations. He was tall and large boned, with white hair, inclining to what is called fandy, and had the reputation of being handsome, though I think he scarce deserved that epithet. He possessed a large fortune, loved mischief. and fluck at nothing for the accomplishment of his defigns; one of his chief pleasures being that of setting two lovers at variance. He employed his address upon me with great affiduity, and knew fo well how to manage my refentment, that I was pleafed with his manner; heard his vows without difgust; and, in a word, promifed to deliberate with myfelf upon his propofals, and give him an account of my determination in writ-

'Thus refolved, I went to Lord B——, in Wiltfhire, whither I was followed by this pretender to my heart, who vifited us on the footing of an acquaintance; but when I reflected on what I had done, I condemned my own conduct as indifcreet, though nothing decifive had paffed between us, and began to hate him in proportion to the felf-conviction I felt; perceiving that I had involved myfelf in a difficulty from which I should not be easily disengaged. For the present, however, I found means to postpone my declaration; he admitted my excuse, and I returned to London with Lord B—, who was again summoned to the field by his former challenger.

r in a

fray

coun-

tade,

form-

vice;

d, to

turn-

where

s, and

glect-

luring

s foon

viour,

R-,

n was

I was

an, or ; nay,

of my

s quite

staken

beha-

never

doften

er than

nought

e same

ry con-

n it is,

roof of

t, & ne

IS. A

he may

onstitu-

inquess heart, My 'H—d—n, governor, counfellor, and steward to this little hero, came to Lord B—— with a verbal message, importing, that his lordship had changed his mind about going to Flanders, but expected to meet him on fuch a day and hour, in the burying-ground near Red Lion Square. Lord B- accepted the chal. lenge, and gave me an account of what had paffed: but he had been anticipated by the messenger, who had already tried to alarm my fears, from the confideration of the consequence, that I might take some measures to prevent their meeting. I perceived his drift, and told him plainly that Lord - had no intention to risk his person, though he endeavoured with all his might to perfuade me, that his principal was desperate and determined. I knew my little husband too well, to think he would bring matters to any dangerous iffue, and was apprehensive of nothing but foul play, from the villainy of H-n, with which I was equally well acquainted. Indeed, I fignified my doubts on that fcore to Mr. B-, who would have attended his kiniman to the field, had he not thought he might be liable to censure, if any thing should happen to Lord B--, because he himself was heir at law: for that reason he judiciously declined being personally concerned; and we pitched upon the Earl of A-, his lordship's uncle, who willingly undertook the office.

At the appointed time they went to the place of rendezvous, where they had not waited long when the challenger appeared, in a new pink fattin waiftcoat, which he had put on for the occasion, with his sword under his arm, and his steward by him, leaving, in an hackney-coach, at some distance a surgeon whom he had provided for the care of his person, Thus equipped, he advanced to his antagonist, and desired him to chuse his ground; upon which Lord B—— told him, that if he must fall, it was not material which grave he should tumble over.

Our little hero finding him so jocose and determined, turned to Lord A—, and desired to speak with him, that he might disburden his conscience, before they should begin the work of death. They accordingly went aside; and he gave him to understand, that his motive for sighting was Lord B——'s detain-

ł

i

f

ŀ

1

P

d

T

a

fi

m

W

ar

tr

ing his wife from him by compulsion. The Earl of A -- affured him he was egregiously mistaken in his conjecture; that his nephew used no force or undue influence to keep me in his house; but it could not be expected that he would turn me out of doors.

'This explanation was altogether fatisfactory to Lord -, who faid he was far from being fo unreafonable as to expect Lord B- would commit fuch a breach of hospitality; and all he defired was, that his wife should be left to her own inclinations. Upon these articles, peace was concluded, and they parted without bloodshed. At least, these are the particulars of the ftory, as they were related by Lord A-, with whom I laughed heartily at the adventure, for I never doubted that the challenger would find fome expedient to prevent the duel, though I wondered how he mustered up relolution enough to carry it fo far.

'That he might not, however, give us any more trouble, we refolved to go and enjoy ourfelves in France: whither I went by myself, in hopes of being soon joined by my lover, who was obliged to stay some time longer in England, to settle his affairs. He was so much affected at our parting (though but a few weeks) that he was almost distracted: and this affliction renewed my tenderness for him, because it was an undoubted proof of his love. I wrote to him every post from France; and, as I had no fecrets, defired him to take care of all the letters that should come to his house. directed to me, after my departure from England.

This was an unfortunate office for him, in the execution of which he chanced to open a letter from Sir T-- A--, with whom (as I have already observed) I had some correspondence at Bath. I had, according to my promife, given this gentleman a decifive answer, importing, that I was determined to remain in my present situation; but as Lord Bwas ignorant of my fentiments in that particular, and perceived from the letter that fomething extraordinary had passed between us, and that I was

VOL. III. earnestly

hom he equiphim to ld him, h grave l detero speak nce, be-They acterstand, detain-

ing

und

hal.

fed: had

tion

ures

and

n to

l his

erate

ill, to

iffue,

from

well that

d his

tht be Lord

r that

con--, his

lace of

ien the iftcoat,

s fword

ing, in

ice.

earnestly solicited to leave him, he was seized with the utmost consternation and concern; and having previously obtained the king's leave to go abroad, set out that very night for France, leaving his affairs in the greatest confusion.

'Sir T A-- hearing I was gone, without understanding the cause of my departure, took the same route, and both arrived at Dover next day.

'They heard of each other's motions; each bribed the master of a packet-boat to transport him with expedition; but that depending upon the wind, both reached Calais at the fame time, though in different vessels. Sir T-- fent his valet de chambre, post, with a letter, intreating me to accompany him into Italy, where he would make me mistress of his whole fortune, and to fet out directly for that country, that he might not lose me by the arrival of Lord B---, promising to join me on the road, if I would consent to make him happy. I fent his messenger back with an answer, wherein I expressed surprize at his proposals, after having fignified my resolution to him before I left England. He was fcarce dismissed, when I received another letter from Lord B-, befeeching me to meet him at Clermont, upon the road from Calais; and conjuring me to avoid the fight of his rival, should he get the start of him in travelling. This, however, was not likely to be the case, as Lord B- rode post, and the other was, by his corpulence, obliged to travel in a chaife; yet, that I might not increase his anxiety, I left Paris immediately on the receipt of his message, and met him at the appointed place; where he received me with all the agitation of joy and fear, and asked if I had ever encouraged Sir T --- A --- in his addresses. I very candidly told him the whole transaction, at which he was incenfed; but his indignation was foon appeared, when I proteffed my penitence, and affured him that I had totally rejected his rival. Not that I approved of my behaviour to Sir T--, who (I own) was ill used

h

d

ar

de

th

ju

un

Wa

my

los

COI

M

col

preduc

in this affair; but furely it was more excusable to halt here, than proceed farther in my indifcretion.

.

it

ne

ut

ne

ed

X-

th

ent

oft,

ole

hat

t to an als,

left

ved

neet con-

l he

ver,

ravel iety,

lage,

eived

esles.

vhich

afed,

hat I red of

lufed

111

'My lover being fatisfied with my declaration, we went together to Paris, being attended by the Scotchman whom I have already mentioned; though I believe he was not over and above well pleased to see matters thus amicably compromised. The furious knight followed us to the capital; infifted on feeing me in perfon; told this North Briton, that I was actually engaged to him; wrote every hour, and railed at my perfidious conduct. I took no notice of these delirious transports, which were also difregarded by Lord B---, till one night he was exasperated by the infinuations of Mr. C-, who, I believe, inflamed his jealoufy, by hinting a fuspicion that I was really in love with his What passed betwixt them I know not, but he fent for me from the opera, by a physician of Paris, who was a fort of go-between among us all, and who

by being used to alarms from the behaviour of Lord, I had acquired a pretty good share of resolution, and with great composure entered the room where Lord — was, with his companion, whom I immediately ordered to withdraw. I then gave his lordship to understand, that I was informed of what had passed, and thought myself so much injured by the person who had just quitted the apartment, that I would no longer live told me, that if I did not come home on the instant, a under the same roof with him.

duel would be fought on my account.

Lord B—— raved like a bedlamite, taxing me with want of candour and affection; but I easily justified my own integrity, and gave him such assurances of my love, that his jealousy subsided, and his spirits were recomposed. Nevertheless, I insisted upon his dismissing Mr. C——, on pain of my leaving the house, as I cold not help thinking he had used his endeavours to prejudice me in the opinion of my lord. If his conduct was the result of friendship for his patron, he certainly

L 2

tainly acted the part of an honest and trusty adherent. But I could not easily forgive him, because a few weeks before, he had, by my interest, obtained a confiderable addition to his allowance; and even after the steps he had taken to disoblige me, I was not so much his enemy but that I prevailed upon Lord B—— to double his salary, that his leaving the samily might be no detriment to his fortune.

'His lordship having complied with my demand, this gentleman, after having stayed three days in the house to prepare for his departure, during which I would not suffer him to be admitted into my presence, made his retreat with a fine young girl who was my companion, and I have never seen him since that time.

'Sir T- ftill continued furious, and would not take a denial, except from my own mouth; upon which, with the approbation of Lord B-, I indulged him with an interview. He entered the apartment with a stern countenance, and told me I had used him ill. I pleaded guilty to the charge, and begged his pardon accordingly. I attempted to reason the case with him, but he would have no arguments except his own, and even tried to intimidate me with threats; which provoked me to fuch a degree, that I defied his vengeance. I told him that I feared nothing but the report of my own conscience; that though I had acted a simple part, he durst not fay there was any thing criminal in my conduct; and that from his prefent frantick and unjust behaviour, I thought myself happy in having escaped him. He swore I was the most inflexible of all creatures, asked if nothing would move me; and when I answered "Nothing," took his leave, and never after persecuted me with his addresses: though I have heard he was vain and false enough to boaft of favours, which, upon my honour, he never received; as he himself, at one time, owned to Doctor Cantwell at Paris.

'While he underwent all this frenzy and distraction upon my account, he was loved with the same violence

W

n

m

in

th

W

nu

an

ha

m

of passion by a certain Scotch lady of quality; who, when he followed me to France, pursued him thither with the same eagerness and expedition. Far from being jealous of me as a rival, she used to come to my house, implore my good offices with the object of her love, and laying herself on the floor at full length before the fire, weep and cry like a person bereft of her senses. She bitterly complained, that he had never obliged her but once; and begged, with the most earnest supplications, that I would give her an opportunity of seeing him at my house. But I thought proper to avoid her company, as soon as I perceived her intention.

We continued at Paris for some time, during which I contracted an acquaintance with the sister of Madam la T—. She was the supposed mistress of the Prince of C——, endowed with a great share of understanding, and loved pleasure to excess, though she maintained her reputation on a respectable footing, by living with her husband and mother. This lady perceiving that I had inspired her lover with a passion, which gave me uneasinels on her account, actually practised all her eloquence and art, in persuading me to listen to his love; for it was a maxim with her, to please him at any rate. I was shocked at her indelicate compliance, and rejected the proposal, as repugnant to my present engagement, which I held as sacred as any nuptial tie, and much more binding than a forced or unnatural marriage.

"Upon our return to England, we lived in great harmony and peace; and nothing was wanting to my happines, but the one thing to me the most needful; I mean the enchanting tenderness and delightful enthusiasin of love. Lord B——'s heart (I believe) felt the fost impressions; and for my own part, I loved him with the most faithful affection. It is not enough to say I wished him well; I had the most delicate, the most genuine esteem for his virtue; I had an intimate regard and anxiety for his interest; and selt for him as if he had been my own son: but still there was a vacancy in my heart; there was not that fervour, that transport,

L3

that

octor action olence of

t.

w

1-

he

ch

to

be

nd,

the

I

ce,

my

e.

not

pon

in-

art-

ufed

ged

the

ex-

with

at I

hing

gh I

any

pre-

ryfelf

s the

vould

k his

effes:

igh to

er re-

that extafy of passion which I had formerly known; my bosom was not filled with the little deity; I could not help recalling to my remembrance the fond, the ravishing moments, I had passed with S.—. Had I understood the conditions of life, those pleasures were happily exchanged for my present situation; because, if I was now deprived of those rapturous enjoyments, I was also exempted from the cares and anxiety that attended them; but I was generally extravagant in my notions of happiness, and therefore construed my present tranquillity into an insipid languor and stagnation of life.

While I remained in this inactivity of sentiment, Lord —, having received a very confiderable addition to his fortune, fent a message to me, promising, that if I would leave Lord B-, he would make me a prefent of a house and furniture, where I should live at my eafe, without being exposed to his visits, except when I should be disposed to receive them. This proposal he made in confequence of what I had always declared, namely, that if he had not reduced me to the necessity of putting myself under the protection of some person or other, by depriving me of any other means of subfiftence, I should never have given the least cause to scandalize my reputation; and that I would withdraw myself from my present dependance, as soon as he should enable me to live by myself. I was therefore refolved to be as good as my word, and accepted his offer, on condition that I should be wholly at my own disposal, and that he should never enter my door but as a visitant or common friend.

'These articles being ratisfied by his word and honour (the value of which I did not then know) an house was furnished according to my directions; and I signified my intention to Lord B—, who consented to my removal, with this proviso, that I should continue to see him. I wrote also to his relation Mr. B—, who, in his answer, observed, that it was too late to advise when I was actually determined. All my friends and acquaintance approved of the scheme,

though

11

though it was one of the most unjustifiable steps I had ever taken, being a real act of ingratitude to my benefactor; which I soon did, and always shall, regret and condemn. So little is the world qualified to judge of private affairs!

nv

ot

Th-

er-

ily

was

alfo

ded

ons

an-

ent,

tion

if I fent

my

vhen

pofal

red.

effity

erion

fub-

ife to draw

s he

refore

d his

own

ut as

e.

When the time of our parting drew near, Lord B— became gloomy and discontented, and even intreated me to postpone my resolution; but I told him, that now every thing was prepared for my reception, I could not retract without incurring the imputation of folly and extravagance. On the very day of my departure, Mr. B --- endeavoured, with all the arguments he could fuggeft, to diffuade me from my purpose; and I made use of the same answer which had fatisfied his friend. Finding me determined upon removing, he burst into a flood of tears, exclaiming, " By G-d, if Lord B-can bear it, I can't!" I was thunderstruck at this expression; for though I had been told that Mr. B-was in love with me, I gave no credit to the report, because he had never declared his passion, and this was the first hint of it that ever escaped him in my hearing. I was therefore so much amazed at the circumstance of this abrupt explanation, that I could make no answer; but having taken my leave, went away, ruminating on the unexpected declaration.

Lord B— (as I was informed) spoke not a word that whole night, and took my leaving him so much to heart, that two years elapsed before he got the better of his grief. This intelligence I afterwards received from his own mouth, and asked his forgiveness for my unkind retreat, though I shall never be able to obtain my own. As for Mr. B—, he was overwhelmed with sorrow, and made such efforts to suppress his concern, as had well nigh cost him his life. Dr. S—— was called to him in the middle of the night, and found him almost sufficated. He soon guessed the cause, when he understood that I had left the house: so that I myself was the only person concerned who was utterly ignorant

of

nd how) an
and I
fented
d conn Mr.
vas too
. All
cheme,
nough

of his affection; for I folemly declare, he never gave me the least reason to suspect it while I lived with his relation, because he had too much honour to entertain a thought of supplanting his friend, and too good an opinion of me to believe he should have succeeded in the attempt. Though my love for Lord B—— was not so tender and interesting as the passion I had felt for S——, my sidelity was inviolable, and I never harboured the most distant thought of any other person, till after I had resolved to leave him, when (I own) I afforded some small encouragement to the addresses of a new admirer, by telling him, that I should, in a little time, be my own mistress, though I was not now at my own disposal.

I enjoyed my own house as a little paradise: it was accommodated with all forts of conveniences; every thing was new, and therefore pleasing, and the whole absolutely at my command. I had the company of a relation, a very good woman, with whom I lived in the most amicable manner; was visited by the best people in town, (I mean those of the male fex, the ladies having long ago forfaken me;) I frequented all reputable places of public entertainment, and had a concert at home once a week; fo that my days rolled on in happiness and quiet, till all my sweets were imbittered by the vexatious behaviour of my husband, who began to importune me again to live with him; and by the increasing anxiety of Lord B-, who (though I still admitted his vifits) plainly perceived that I wanted to relinquish his correspondence. This discovery raised fuch tempelts of jealoufy and despair within his breaft, that he kept me in continual alarms: he fent messages to me every hour, figned his letters with his own blood, raved like a man in an extaly of madness, railed at my ingratitude, and praised my conduct by turns. He offered to facrifice every thing for my love, to leave the kingdom forthwith, and live with me for ever in any part of the world where I should chuse to reside.

These were generous and tempting proposals; but

I was

Iv

int

pro

be

ad

for

caf

tin

dit

mi

em

gen

did

to

tru

unt

mir

ver

eve

my

retu

upo

agr

thai

ceed

love

pafi

and

ami

ract

to f

qua

I sh

char

fage

my

and

is

a

i-

ne

ot

r-

n,

I

of

tle

at

ras

ery

ole

fa

the

ple

av-

ble

t at

ap-

by

n to

in-

ftill

d to

ifed

eaft,

ages

ood,

my

He

e the

any

but

was

I was befet with counsellors who were not totally difinterested, and who disturated me from embracing the profers of my lover, on pretence that Lord — would be highly injured by my compliance. I liftened to their advice, and hardened my heart against Lord B--'s forrow and folicitations. My behaviour on this occasion is altogether unaccountable; this was the only time that ever I was a flave to admonition. The condition of Lord B- would have melted any heart but mine, and yet mine was one of the most fensible: he employed his cousin as an advocate with me, till that gentleman actually refused the office, telling him candidly, that his own inclinations were too much engaged to permit him to perform the task with fidelity and truth. He accordingly refolved to avoid my presence, until my lord and I should come to some final determination, which was greatly retarded by the perfeverance of his lordship, who would not refign his hopes, even when I pretended that another man had engaged my heart, but faid, that in time my affection might return.

Our correspondence, however, gradually wore off; upon which Mr. B—— renewed his visits, and many agreeable and happy hours we passed together. Not that he, or any other person whom I now saw, succeeded to the privilege of a fortunate lover: I knew he loved me to madness; but I would not gratify his passion any other way than by the most profound esteem and veneration for his virtues, which were altogether amiable and sublime; and I would here draw his character minutely, but it would take up too much time to set forth his merits; the only man living of my acquaintance who resembles him is Lord F——, of whom I shall speak in the sequel.

About this time, I underwent a very interesting change in the situation of my heart. I had sent a message to my old lover S——, desiring he would allow my picture, which was in his possession, to be copied; and he now transmitted it to me by my lawyer, whom

fed

CO

hi

tha

rad

po

em

affi

hin

cor

by

the

vifi

ftoo

If

hin

the

pro

clar

vin

finc

V-

and

fifte

me

Ace

at I

mor

reft

thin

fo fa

my

frier

his

this

he directed to ask, if I intended to be at the next masquerade. This curiosity had a strange effect upon my spirits; my heart fluttered at the question, and my imagination glowed with a thousand fond presages. I answered in the affirmative, and we met by accident at the ball. I could not behold him without emotion; when he accosted me, his well-known voice made my heart vibrate, like a musical chord, when it's unison is struck. All the ideas of our past love, which the lapse of time and absence had enseebled and lulled to sleep, now awoke, and were re-inspired by his appearance; so that his artful excuses were easily admitted: I forgave him all that I had suffered on his account, because he was the natural lord of my affection; and our former correspondence was renewed.

I thought myself in a new world of bliss, in consequence of this reconciliation, the raptures of which continued unimpaired for the space of four months; during which time he was fonder of me, if possible, than before; repeated his promise of marriage, if we should ever have it in our power; affured me he had never been happy fince he left me; that he believed no man had ever loved like me; and, indeed, to have a notion of my paffion for that man, you must first have loved as I did: but through a strange caprice, I broke off the correspondence, out of apprehension that he would forfake me again. From his past conduct, I dreaded what might happen; and the remembrance of what I had undergone by his inconfiftency, filled my imagination with fuch horror, that I could not endure the shocking prospect, and prematurely plunged myself into the danger, rather than endure the terrors of expectation. I remembered that his former attachment began in the feafon of my prosperity, when my fortune was in the zenith, and my youth in it's prime; and that he had forfaken me in the day of trouble, when my life became embarrassed, and my circumstances were on the decline: I forefaw nothing but continual perfecution from my husband, and feared, that if once the keener transports transports of our reconciliation should be over, his affection would fink under the severity of it's trial. consequence of this desertion, I received a letter from him, acknowledging that he was rightly ferved, but that my retreat gave him inexpressible concern.

1-

1-

16 en

rt k.

ne

w

nat

im

vas

or-

011-ich hs;

han ould

ever

man

tion

oved

e off

ould

aded

nat I

gina-

e the

ryfelf

f ex-

ment

rtune

d that

y life

on the

cution

keener

ports

'Meanwhile, Lord -- continued to act in the character of a fiend, tormenting me with his nauseous importunities: he prevailed upon the Duke of L- to employ his influence in perfuading me to live with him; affuring his grace, that I had actually promifed to give him that proof of my obedience, and that I would come home the fooner for being preffed to compliance by a person of his rank and character. Induced by these representations, the duke honoured me with a visit; and in the course of his exhortations I underflood how he had been thus misinformed: upon which I fent for Lord —, and in his presence convicted him of the falshood, by communicating to his grace the article of our last agreement, which he did not think proper to deny; and the duke being undeceived, declared that he would not have given me the trouble of vindicating myself, had he not been missed by the infincerity of my lord.

'Baffled in this attempt, he engaged Mr. H-V-, and afterwards my own father, in the fame talk; and though I still adhered to my first resolution, perfifted with fuch obstinacy in his endeavours to make me unhappy, that I determined to leave the kingdom. Accordingly, after I had spent the evening with him at Ranelagh, I went away about two o'clock in the morning, leaving my companion, with directions to restore to my lord his house, furniture, plate, and every thing he had given me fince our last accommodation; so far was I, upon this occasion, or at any other time of my life, from embezzling any part of his fortune. My friend followed my instructions most punctually; and his lordflip knows and will acknowledge the truth of this affertion.

&#x27;Thus have I explained the true cause of my first expedition expedition to Flanders, whither the world was goodnatured enough to fay I followed Mr. B—— and the whole army, which happened to be fent abroad that fummer. Before my departure, I likewife transmitted to Lord B—— the dressing-plate, china, and a very considerable settlement, of which he had been generous enough to make me a present. This was an instance of my integrity, which I thought due to a man who had laid me under great obligations; and though I have lived to be refused a small sum both by him and S——, I do not repent of my disinterested behaviour; all the revenge I harbour against the last of these lovers, is the desire of having it in my power to do him good.

'I now found myself adrift in the world again, and very richly deserved the hardships of my condition, for my indifcretion in leaving Lord B-, and in truffing to the word of Lord ---, without some farther security; but I have dearly paid for my imprudence. The more I faw into the character of this man, whom destiny hath appointed my scourge, the more was I determined to avoid his fellowship and communication; for he and I are, in point of disposition, as op posite as any two principles in nature. In the first place, he is one of the most unsocial beings that ever existed: when I was pleased and happy, he was always out of temper; but if he could find means to overcast and cloud my mirth, though never so innocent, he then discovered figns of uncommon satisfaction and content; because, by this disagreeable temper, he banished all company from his house. He is extremely weak of understanding, though he possesses a good share of low cunning, which has fo egregiously imposed upon some people, that they have actually believed him a goodnatured eafy creature, and blamed me because I did not manage him to better purpole; but, upon farther acquaintance, they have always found him obstinate as a mule, and capricious as a monkey. Not that he is utterly void of all commendable qualities; he is punctual in paying his debts, liberal when in good-humour, u

ki

CC

as

ar

be

ha

is

gl

lic

Wi

at

by

Wh

dar

anc

Ih

is 1

mo

lay

enq

live

ftoc

ing

con

vinc

bott

able

fail

da

he

nat

ed

ery

ous

nce

rho

I

and

ur;

ers,

d.

and

for

ting

ecu-

The

hom

as I

nica-

qo s

first

ever

ways

realt

then

tent;

ed all

ak of

f low

fome

good-

id not

er ace as a

he is

punc+

mour,

and

VOL. III.

and would be well bred, were he not subject to fits of absence, during which he is altogether unconversable; but he is proud, naturally suspicious, jealous, equally with and without cause, never made a friend, and is an utter stranger to the joys of intimacy; in short, he hangs like a damp upon society, and may be properly called kill joy, an epithet which he has justly acquired. He honours me with constant professions of love, but his conduct is so opposite to my sentiments of that passion, as to have been the prime source of all my missfortunes and affliction; and I have often wished myself the object of his hate, in hopes of profiting by a change in his behaviour.

'Indeed, he has not been able to make me more unhappy than, I believe, he is in his own mind; for he is literally a felf-tormentor, who never enjoyed one gleam of fatisfaction, except at the expence of another's quiet; and yet with this (I had almost called it diabolical) quality, he expects that I should cherish him with all the tenderness of affection. After he has been at pains to incur my aversion, he punishes my disgust, by contriving schemes to mortify and perplex me, which have often succeeded so effectually, as to endanger my life and constitution; for I have been fretted and frighted into sundry fits of illness, and then I own I have experienced his care and concern.

Over and above the oddities I have mentioned, he is so unsteady in his occonomy, that he is always new-modelling his affairs, and exhausting his fortune, by laying out ten pounds in order to save a shilling. He enquires into the character of a servant after he has lived two years in his family; and is so ridiculously stocked with vanity and self-conceit, that notwithstanding my assurance before, and the whole series of my conduct since our marriage, which ought to have convinced him of my dislike, he is still persuaded, that at bottom I must admire and be enamoured of his agreeable person and accomplishments, and that I would not fail to manifest my love, were I not spirited up against him by his own relations. Perhaps it might be their interest to foment the misunderstanding betwixt us, but really they give themselves no trouble about our affairs; and, so far as I know them, are a very good fort of people. On the whole, I think I may with justice pronounce my precious yoke-fellow a trisling, teazing, insufferable, inconsistent creature.

With the little money which remained of what I had received from his lordship for housekeeping, I transported myself to Flanders, and arrived in Ghent a few days after our troops were quartered in that city, which was fo much crouded with these new visitants, that I should have found it impracticable to procure a lodging, had I not been accommodated by Lord R-B-, the Duke of A--'s youngest brother, who very politely gave me up his own. Here I faw my friend Mr. B-, who was overjoyed at my arrival. though jealous of every man of his acquaintance; for he loved me with all the ardour of passion, and I regarded him with all the perfection of friendship, which, had he lived, might in time have produced love; though that was a fruit which it never brought forth. Notwithstanding his earnest solicitations to the contrary, I stayed but a week in Ghent, from whence I proceeded to Bruffels, and fixed my abode in the Hotel de Flandre, among an agreeable fet of gentlemen and ladies, with whom'I spent my time very chearfully. There was a fort of court in this city, frequented by all the officers who could obtain permission to go thither; and the place in general was gay and agreeable. I was introduced to the best families, and very happy in my acquaintance, for the ladies were polite, good-tempered, and obliging, and treated me with the utmost hospitality and respect. Among others, I contracted a friendship with Madam la Comtesse de C-, and her two daughters, who were very amiable young ladies; and became intimate with the Princess C-, and Countess W-, lady of the bed chamber to the Queen of Hungary, and a great favourite of the Governor Monficur D'H--,

1

n

fe

fe

ft

b

ci

V

ft

ei

b

b

n

h

m

n

P

t

W

d

in whose house she lived with his wife, who was also a lady of a very engaging disposition.

'Soon after I had fixed my habitation in Bruffels, the company at our hotel was increased by three officers, who professed themselves my admirers, and came from Ghent with a view of foliciting my love. This triumvirate confifted of the Scotch earl of ---, Lord R- M-, and another young officer: the first was a man of a very genteel figure and amorous complexion, danced well, and had a great deal of good-humour, with a mixture of vanity and felf-conceit; the fecond had a good face, though a clumfy person, and a very fweet disposition, very much adapted for the fentimental passion of love; and the third (Mr. Wby name) was tall, thin, and well-bred, with a great flock of good-nature and vivacity. These adventurers began their addresses in general acts of gallantry, that comprehended several of my female friends, with whom we used to engage in parties of pleasure, both in the city and the environs, which are extremely agreeable. When they thought they had taken the preliminary steps of securing themselves in my good opinion and efteem, they agreed to go on without further delay, and that Lord —— should make the first attack upon my heart.

'He accordingly laid siege to me with such warmth and assiduity, that I believed he deceived himself, and began to think he was actually in love; though at bottom he felt no impulse that deserved the sacred name. Though I discouraged him in the beginning, he persecuted me with his addresses; he always sat by me at dinner, and imparted a thousand trisses in continual whispers, which attracted the notice of the company so much, that I began to fear his behaviour would give rise to some report to my prejudice; and therefore avoided him with the utmost caution. Notwithstanding all my care, however, he sound means one night, while my maid, who lay in my room, went slown stairs, to get into my chamber after I was a bed,

ir

ut

s;

of 0-

n-

I

nf-

ew

ty,

its,

e a

vho

my

val,

for

re-

ich,

ugh

Not-

y, I

eded

idre,

with

vas a

icers

place

uced

ance,

ging,

pect.

adam

who

imate

, lady

and a

upon which I started up, and told him that if he should approach me, I would alarm the house; for I never wanted courage and refolution. Perceiving my difpleasure, he begged I would have pity on his sufferings, and fwore I should have carte blanche to the utmost ex-To these proposals I made no tent of his fortune. other reply, but that of protesting I would never speak to him again, if he did not quit my apartment that moment; upon which he thought proper to withdraw; and I never afterwards gave him an opportunity of speaking to me on the same subject: so that, in a few weeks, he separated himself from our society; though the ladies of Bruffels, confidered him as my lover, because, of all the other officers, he was their greatest favourite.

'His lordship being thus repulsed, Mr. W-took the field, and assailed my heart in a very different manner. He said he knew not how to make love, but was a man of honour, would keep the secret, and so forth. To this cavalier address I answered, that I was not angry, as I otherwise should have been at his blunt declaration, because I sound by his own confession, he did not know what was due to the sex; and my unhappy situation in some shape excused him for a liberty which he would not have dreamed of taking, had not my misfortunes encouraged his presumption. But I would deal with him in his own way; and, far from assuming the prude, frankly assured him, that he was not at all to my taste, hoping he would consider my dislike as a sufficient reason to reject his love.

Lord R—began to feel the symptoms of a genuine passion, which he carefully cherished in silence, being naturally dissident and bashful; but by the very means he used to conceal it from my observation, I plainly discerned the situation of his heart, and was not at all displeased at the progress I had made in his inclinations. Meanwhile, he cultivated my acquaintance with great assiduity and respect, attended me in all my excursions, and particularly in an expedition to Antwerp, with two other gentlemen, where in downright gaieté de cœur we sat for our pictures, which were drawn in one piece; one of the party being represented in the dress of an hussar, and another in that of a running footman. This incident I mention, because the performance, which is now in my possession, gave birth to a thousand groundless reports, that circulated in England at our expence.

It was immediately after this jaunt, that Lord Rbegan to disclose his passion; though he, at the same time, ftarted fuch objections as feemed well nigh to extinguish his hopes, 'menting, that if he should have the happiness to engage my affections, his fortune was too inconfiderable to support us against the efforts of Lord ——, should he attempt to interrupt our felicity: and that he himself was obliged to follow the motions of the army. In short, he seemed to consider my felicity more than his own, and behaved with fuch delieacy, as gradually made an impression on my heart; so that when we parted, we agreed to renew our correspondence in England.

In the midst of these agreeable amusements, which I enjoyed in almost all the different parts of Flanders, I happened to be at Ghent one day, fitting among a great deal of company, in one of their hotels, when a post chaise stopped at the gate; upon which we went to the windows to fatisfy our curiofity, when who should step out of the convenience, but my little infignificant lord. I no fooner announced him to the company, than all the gentlemen asked whether they should flay and protect me, or withdraw; and when I affured them that their protection was not necessary, one and all of them retired; though Lord R-- M-- went so farther than the parlour below, being determined to screen me against all violence and compulsion. I sent a meffage to my lord defiring him to walk up into my apartment; but although his fole errand was to fee and carry me off, he would not venture to accept of my in-

M 3 vitation.

fagefilence, ne very tion, I was not s incliintance all my o Antwerp,

ould

ever

dif-

ngs,

t ex-

e no

peak

mo-

raw;

y of

few

ough

, be-

eatest

Ferent

, but

and fo

I was

blunt

on, he

v un-

iberty

ad not

But I

r from

e was

ny dif-

vitation, till he had demanded me in form from the governor of the place.

'That gentleman being altogether a stranger to his person and character, referred him to the commanding officer of the English troops, who was a man of honour, and upon his lordship's application, pretended to doubt his identity; observing, that he had always heard Lord—represented as a jolly corpulent man. He gave him to understand, however, that even granting him to be the person, I was by no means subject to military law, unless he could prove that I had ever listed in his majesty's service.

'Thus disappointed in his endeavours, he returned to the inn, and with much perfuasion, trusted himself in my dining-room, after having stationed his attendant at the door, in case of accidents. When I asked, what had procured me the honour of his vifit; he told me his bufiness and intention were to carry me home. This declaration produced a conference, in which I argued the case with him; and matters were accommodated for the present, by my promising to be in England fome time in September, on condition that he would permit me to live by myfelf, as before, and immediately order the arrears of my pin money to be paid. affented to every thing I proposed, returned in peace to his own country, and the deficiencies of my allowance were made good; while I returned to Bruffels, where I stayed until my départure for England, which I regulated in fuch a manner as was confiftent with my engagement,

I took lodgings in Pall Mall, and fending for my lord, convinced him of my punctuality, and put him in mind of his promife; when, to my utter aftonishment and confusion, he owned, that his promise was no more than a decoy to bring me over, and that I must lay my account with living in his house like a dutiful and obedient wife. I heard him with the indignation such treatment deserved, upbraiding him with his persidious dealing, which I told him would have determined me against cohabitation with him, had I not been already resolved: and being destitute of all resource, repaired to Bath, where I afterwards met with Mr. D—— and Mr. R——, two gentlemen who had been my fellow-passengers in the yacht from Flanders, and treated me with great friendship and politeness, without either talking or thinking of love.

With these gentlemen, who were as idle as myself, I went to the jubilee at Preston, which was no other than a great number of people affembled in a small town, extremely ill accommodated, to partake of diversions that were bad imitations of plays, concerts, and maf-If the world should place to the account of my indifcretion my travelling in this manner, with gentlemen to whom I had no particular attachment, let it also be considered, as an alleviation, that I always lived in terror of my lord, and confequently was often obliged to flift my quarters; fo that my finances being extremely flender, I stood the more in need of affistance and protection. I was, befides, young, inconfiderate, and so simple, as to suppose the figure of an ugly man would always fecure me from cenfure on his account: neither did I ever dream of any man's addresses, until he made an actual declaration of his love.

Lord —, who came thither accompanied by my father, whom I was very glad to fee, though he importuned me to comply with my husband's defire, and for the future keep measures with the world. This remonstrance about living with my lord, which he constantly repeated, was the only instance of his unkindness which I ever felt. But all his admonitions were not of force sufficient to shake my resolution in that particular; though the debate continued so late, that I told his lordship, it was high time to retire, for I could not accommodate him with a bed. He then gave me to understand, that he would stay where he was in upon

his ling our,

go-

oubt ord gave n' to

his

rned nfelf idant what d me ome. I ar-

Eng-

He ace to wance here I regu-

or my him in himent
o more
ay my hid oben fuch fidious
ned me
gainft

upon which my father took his leave, on pretence of looking out for a lodging for himself.

The little gentleman being now left tête à tête with me, began to discover some signs of apprehension in his looks; but mustering up all his resolution, he went to the door, called up three of his fervants, whom he placed as centinels upon the ftair, and flounced into my elbow-chair, where he refigned himself to reft. Intending to go to bed, I thought it was but just and decent that I should screen myself from the intrusion of his footmen, and with that view bolted the door. Lord - hearing himself locked in, started up in the utmost terror and consternation, kicked the door with his heel, and screamed aloud, as if he had been in the hands of an affaffin. My father, who had not yet quitted the house, hearing these outcries, ran up stairs again, and coming through my bed-chamber into the dining-room, where we were, found me almost suffocated with laughter, and his heroick fon-in-law staring like one who had loft his wits, with his hair standing on end.

When my father asked the meaning of his exclamations, he told him with all the fymptoms of difmay. that I had locked him in, and he did not understand fuch usage; but I explained the whole mystery, by saying, I had bolted the door, because I did not like the company of his fervants, and could not imagine the cause of his panick, unless he thought I defigned to ravish him: an infult, than which nothing was farther from my intention. My father himfelf could scarce refrain from laughing at his ridiculous fear; but feeing him in great confusion, took pity on his condition, and carried him off to his own lodgings, after I had given my word, that I would not attempt to escape, but give him audience next morning. I accordingly kept my promife, and found means to perfuade them to leave me at my own discretion. Next day I was rallied upon the stratagem I had contrived to frighten Lord -; and a thousand idle stories were told about this adventure, which happened literally as I have related it.

i

tl

n

to

cl

tu

in

N

de

W

an

lo

From Bath I betook myself to a small house near Lincoln, which I had hired of the D- of A-, because a country life suited best with my income, which was no more than four hundred pounds a year, and that not well paid. I continued fome months in this retirement, and faw no company except Lord R-M-. who lived in the neighbourhood, and visited me twice: till finding myfelf indisposed, I was obliged to remove to London, and took lodgings in Maddox Street, where my garrison was taken by storm, by my lord and his steward, reinforced by Mr. L-V-, (who, as my lord told me, had a fubfidy of five and twenty pounds, before he would take the field) and a couple of hardy footmen. This formidable band rufhed into my apartment, laid violent hands upon me, dragged me down stairs without gloves or a cloak, and thrusting me into a coach that flood at the door, conveyed me to my lord's lodgings in Gloucester Street.

'Upon this occasion, his lordship courageously drew his fword upon my woman, who attempted to defend me from his infults, and in all probability would have intimidated him from proceeding, for he looked pale and aghaft, his knees knocked together, and he breathed thick and hard, with his nostrils dilated, as if he had feen a ghost. But he was encouraged by his mercenary affociate: who, for the five and twenty pounds, flood by him in the day of trouble, and spirited him on to this gallant enterprize.

f

h

13

to

he

to

A.

nd

of

ord

ut-

his

nds

the

and

om. gh-

who

cla-

nav.

and fav-

the

ause

avish from

frain

him

car-

n my

give

t my leave

d upd -;

dven-

rom

'In consequence of this exploit, I was cooped in a paltry apartment in Gloucester Street, where I was close beset by his lordship, and his worthy steward Mr. H---, with a fet of fervants that were the creatures of this fellow, of whom Lord --- himfelf flood in awe; fo that I could not help thinking myself in Newgate, among thieves and ruffians. To fuch a degree did my terror prevail, that I actually believed I was in danger of being poisoned, and would not receive any fustenance, except from the hands of one harmless looking fellow, a foreigner, who was my lord's valet de chambre. I will not pretend to fay my fears were just; but such was my opinion of H—n, that I never doubted he would put me out of the way, if he thought my life interfered with his interest.

On the second day of my imprisonment, I was vifited by the Duke of L-, a friend of my lord; who found me fitting upon a trunk, in a poor little dining room filled with lumber, and lighted with two bits of tallow candle, which had been left over-night. He perceived in my countenance a mixture of rage, indignation, terror, and despair; he compassionated my sufferings, though he could not alleviate my diffress, any other way than by interceding with my tyrant to mitigate my oppression, Nevertheless, I remained eleven days in this comfortable fituation: I was watched like a criminal all day, and one of the fervants walked from one room to another all night, in the nature of a patrole: while my lord, who lay in the chamber above me, got out of bed, and tripped to the window, at the found of every coach that chanced to pass through the street. H--n, who was confummate in the arts of a sycophant, began to court my favour, by condoling my affliction, and affuring me, that the only method by which I could regain my liberty, was a chearful compliance with the humour of my lord. I was fully convinced of the truth of this observation; and though my temper is altogether averse to dissimulation, attempted to affect an air of ferenity and refignation. But this disguise, I found, would not answer my purpose; and therefore I had recourse to the affistance of my maid, who was permitted to attend me in my confinement. With her I frequently confulted about the means of accomplishing my escape. In consequence of our deliberations, she directed a coach and fix to be ready at a certain part of the town, and to wait for me three days in the same place, in case I could not come before the expiration of that term.

'This previous measure being taken according to my instructions, the next necessary step was so elude

h

fc

W

p

of

m

m

ac

m

fa

tic

no

an

pr

in

thi

wa

ove

wit

bro

but

in 1

day

lord

25

the vigilance of my guard; and in this manner did I effectuate my purpose. Being, by this time, indulged in the liberty of going out in the coach, for the benefit of the air, attended by two footmen, who had orders to watch all my motions, I made use of this privilege one forenoon, when Lord - expected fome company to dinner, and bade the coachman drive to the lodgings of a man who wrote with his mouth, intending to give my spies the slip, on pretence of seeing this curiosity; but they were too alert in their duty to be thus outwitted, and followed me up stairs into the very apartment.

' Disappointed in this hope, I revolved another scheme, which was attended with success; I bought fome olives at an oil-shop; and telling the servants I would proceed to St James's gate, and take a turn in the park, broke one of the bottles by the way, complained of the misfortune when I was fet down, and defired that my coach might be cleaned before my return. While my attendants were employed in this office, I tripped across the parade to the Horse Guards, and chanced to meet with an acquaintance in the Park, who faid, he faw by my countenance that I was upon some expedition. I owned his fuspicion was just; but; as I had not time to relate particulars, I quickened my pace, and took peffession of a hackney-coach, in which I proceeded to the vehicle which I had appointed to be in waiting.

While I thus compassed my escape, there was nothing but perplexity and confusion at home; dinner was delayed till fix o'clock: my lord ran half the town over in quest of his equipage, which at last returned with an account of my elopement. My maid was brought to the question, and grievously threatened; but (like all the women I ever had) remained unshaken in her fidelity. In the mean time, I travelled night and day towards my retreat in Lincolnshire, of which his lerdship had not, as yet, got the least intelligence; and fo elude as my coachman was but an unexperienced driver, I

rding to the

ft:

ver

ght

Vivho

ing

s of He

digfuf-

any niti-

even

like

from role:

, got

nd of treet.

fycony af-

od by com-

v con-

hough

n, atation.

y purance of

y conout the

ence of x to be

for me

t come

was obliged to make use of my own skill in that exercise, and direct his endeavours the whole way, without venturing to go to bed, or take the least repose, until I reached my own habitation. There I lived in peace and tranquillity for the space of six weeks, when I was alarmed by one of my lord's myrmidons, who came into the neighbourhood, blustering and swearing, that he would carry me off, either dead or alive.

'It is not to be supposed that I was perfectly easy when I was made acquainted with his purpose and declaration, as my whole family consisted of no more than a couple of women and one footman. However, I summoned up my courage, which had been often tried, and never forsook me in the day of danger, and sent him word, that if ever he should presume to approach my house, I would order him to be shot without ceremony. The fellow did not chuse to put me to the trial, and returned to town without his errand. But as the place of my abode was now discovered, I laid my account with having a visit from his employer: I therefore planted spies upon the road, with a promise of reward to him who should bring me the first intelligence of his lordship's approach.

B

21

CI

W

to

bi

th

he

fti

ha

W

ha

he

ing

tio

in

off

'Accordingly, I was one morning apprized of his coming; and mounting horse immediately, with my woman and valet, away we rode, in defiance of winter. In two days I traversed the wilds of Lincolnshire and hundreds of Effex; croffed the river at Tilbury; breakfasted at Chatham; by the help of a guide and moonlight arrived at Dover the same evening; embarked for Calais, in which place I found myfelf-next day at two o'clock in the afternoon; and being heartily tired of my journey, betook myself to rest. My maid, who was not able to travel with fuch expedition, followed me at an easier pace; and the footman was so astonished at my perseverance, that he could not help asking upon the road, if ever I was weary in my life. Certain it is, my spirits and resolution have enabled me to undergo fatigues that are almost incredible. From Cahis I went to Brussels, where I again set up my rest in private lodgings; was again perfectly well received by the fashionable people of that place: and, by the interest of my friends, obtained the Queen of Hungary's protection against the persecution of my husband, while I remained in the Austrian Netherlands.

I

1-

10 fy

ean

I

d,

nt

ch

he

But

my

1 aife

:lli-

his

my

ter.

and

ak-

00114

for

two

d of

who

owed

afto-

king

Cer-

ne to

lais

'Thus fecured, I lived uncenfured, converfing with the English company, with which this city was crouded, but spent the most agreeable part of my time with the Countess of Calemberg, in whose house I generally dined and supped; and I also contracted an intimacy with the Princess of Chemay, who was a great favourite with Madam D'Harrach, the governor's lady.

'I had not been long in this happy fituation, when I was disturbed by the arrival of Lord ----, who demanded me of the governor; but finding me sheltered from his power, he fet out for Vienna: and, in confequence of his representations, strengthened with the Duke of N-'s name, my protection was withdrawn. But, before this application, he had gone to the camp, and addressed himself to Lord Stair, who was my particular friend and ally by my first marriage, desiring he would compel me to return to his house. His lordship told him that I. was in no shape subject to his command; but invited him to dinner, with a view of diverting himself and company at the expense of his guest. In the evening he was plied with so many bumpers to my health, that he became intoxicated, and extremely obstreperous; infifted upon feeing Lord Stair after he had retired to rest, and quarrelled with Lord D----, who being a tall, large, raw-boned Scotchman, could have fwallowed him at one mouthful; but he thought he might venture to challenge him, in hopes of being put under arrest by the general: though he reckoned without his hoft; Lord Stair knew his disposition, and, in order to punish his presumption, winked at the affair. The challenger, finding himself mistaken in his conjecture, got up early in the morning, and went off post to Vienna; and Lord Stair defired a certain man VOL. III.

of quality to make me a vifit, and give me an account of his behaviour.

Being now deprived of my protection and pin-money, which my generous husband would no longer pay, I was reduced to great difficulty and diffress. The Duchess D'Aremberg, Lord G-, and many other persons of distinction, interceded in my behalf with his majesty, who was then abroad; but he refused to interpose between man and wife. The Countess of Calemberg wrote a letter to my father, in which she represented my uncomfortable fituation, and undertook to answer for my conduct, in case he would allow me a fmall annuity, on which I could live independent of Lord -, who, by all accounts was a wretch with whom I could never enjoy the least happiness or quiet; otherwise she would be the first to advise me to an accommodation. She gave him to understand, that her character was neither doubtful nor obscure; and that if my conduct there had not been irreproachable, the should not have taken me under her protection: that as I proposed to board in a convent, a small sum would answer my occasions; but, if that should be denied, I would actually go to fervice, or take fome other desperate step, to avoid the man who was my bane and averfion.

'To this kind remonstrance my father answered, that his fortune would not allow him to affist me; he had now a young family; and that I ought at all events, to return to my husband. By this time such was the extremity of my circumstances, that I was forced to pawn my cloaths, and every trifling trinket in my possession, and even to descend so far as to solicit Mr. S—— for a loan of fifty pounds, which he refused.

'Thus was I deferted, in my diffres, by two perfons to whom, in the season of my affluence, my purse had been always open. Nothing so effectually subdues a spirit unused to supplicate, as want! Repulsed in this manner, I had recourse to Lord B——, who was also (it seems) unable to relieve my necessities.

This

e

m

fe

di

to

lit

m

CC

m

de

tiv

an

tri

fri

pa

Wi

This mortification I deferved at his hands, though he had once put it in my power to be above all paltry applications; and I should not have been compelled to the disagreeable task of troubling my friends, had not I voluntarily refigned what he formerly gave me. As to the other gentleman to whom I addressed myself on this occasion, I think he might have shewn more regard to my situation, not only for the reasons already mentioned, but because he knew me too well, to be ignorant of what I must have suffered, in condescending to make fuch a requeft.

iŧ

1,

le

er

is

n-

a-

eok

a

of ith

t;

her

hat

fhe

as

uld

pe-

ver-

red,

he

fuch

was

nket

licit

ifed.

per-

ourle

fub-

ulfed

who ities.

his

'Several officers, who gueffed my advertity, generously offered to supply me with money; but I could not bring myself to make use of their friendship, or even to own my diffress, except to one person, of whom I borrowed a small sum. To crown my misfortunes. I was taken very ill, at a time when there was no other way of avoiding the clutches of my persecutor, but by a precipitate flight. In this emergency, I applied to a worthy gentleman at Brussels, a very good friend of mine, but no lover, I fay, no lover, because every man is supposed to act in that capacity who befriends a young woman in diffress. This generous Fleming fet out with me in the night from Bruffels, and conducted me to the frontiers of France. Being very much indifposed both in mind and body when I was obliged to undertake this expedition, I should, in all probability, have funk under the fatigue of travelling, had not my spirits been kept up by the conversation of my companion, who was a man of bufiness and consequence, and undertook to manage my affairs in such a manner as would enable me to re-establish my residence in the place I had left. He was young and active, attended me with the utmost care and affiduity, and left nothing undone which he thought would contribute to my eafe and fatisfaction. I believe his friendship for me was a little tinctured with another paffion; but he was married, and lived very well with his wife, who was also my frien :: so that he knew I would never think of him in the light of a lover.

N2

'Upon our arrival at Valenciennes, he accommodated me with a little money (for a little was all I would take) and returned to his own city, after we had fettled a correspondence by letters. I was detained a day or two in this place by my indisposition, which increased; but nevertheless proceeded to Paris, to make interest for a protection from the King of France, which that monarch graciously accorded me, in three days after my first application; and his minister sent orders to all the governors and intendants of the province towns, to protect me against the efforts of Lord—, in whatever place I should chuse to reside.

'Having returned my thanks at Versailles for this favour, and tarried a few days at Paris, which was a place altogether unsuitable to the low ebb of my fortune, I repaired to Lisle, where I intended to fix my babitation: and there my disorder recurred with such violence, that I was obliged to send for a physician, who seemed to have been a disciple of Sangrado; for he scarce left a drop of blood in my body, and yet I found myself never a whit the better. Indeed, I was so much exhausted by these evacuations, and my constitution so much impaired by fatigue and perturbation of mind, that I had no other hope of recovering but that of reaching England, and putting myself under the direction of a physician on whose ability I could depend.

With this doubtful prospect, therefore, I determined to attempt a return to my native air, and actually departed from Lisle, in such a melancholy and seeble condition, that I had almost fainted when I was put into the coach. But before I resolved upon this journey I was reduced to the utmost exigence of fortune; so that I could scarce afford to buy provisions, had it been in my power to cat, and should not have been able to defray my travelling expences, had I not been genere say befriended by Lord R——M——, who (ease a red the

· In

Calais death, on the ed by into t ceive were a took ing to Havir cloath time v

ried to

· H

we puinn for dial the of wait to A you feeing me, at the appropriate from There to fin havin

my lo becau misfor

politie

and en

vided

who (I am fure) would have done any thing for my ease and accommodation, though he has unjustly incurred the imputation of being parsimonious, and I had no reason to expect any such favour at his hands.

In this deplorable state of health I was conveyed to Calais, being all the way (as it were) in the arms of death, without having swallowed the least sustenance on the road. So much was my indisposition augmented by the journey, that I swooned when I was brought into the inn, and had almost expired before I could receive the least affistance or advice; however, my spirits were a little revived by some bread and wine, which I took at the persuasion of a French surgeon, who chancing to pass by the door, was called up to my relief. Having sent my servant to Brussels, to take care of my cloaths, I embarked in the packet-boat, and by that time we arrived at Dover, was almost in extremity.

'Here I found a return coach, in which I was carried to London, and was put to bed in the house where we put up, more dead than alive. The people of the inn fent for an apothecary, who administered some cordial that recalled me to life; and when I recovered the use of speech, I told him who I was, and defired him to wait upon Dr. S- and inform him of my fituation. A young girl, who was niece to the landlord's wife, feeing me unattended, made a tender of her fervice to me, and I accepted the offer, as well as of a lodging in the apothecary's house, to which I was conveyed as foon as my strength would admit of my removal. There I was vifited by my phyfician, who was shocked to find me in fuch a dangerous condition; however, having confidered my case, he perceived that my indifposition proceeded from the calamities Ihad undergone, and encouraged me with a hope of a speedy cure, provided I could be kept eafy and undiffurbed.

'I was accordingly attended with all imaginable care, my lord's name being never mentioned in my hearing, because I considered him as the fatal source of all my missortunes; and in a month I recovered my health, by the great skill and tenderness of my doctor, who now finding me strong enough to encounter fresh troubles, endeavoured to persuade me, that it would be my wisest step to return to my husband, whom, at that time, he had often occasion to see. But I rejected his proposal, commenced a new law-suit for separation, and took a small house in St. James's Square.

e

' About this time, my woman returned from Bruffels, but without my cloaths, which were detained on account of the money I owed in that place; and asking her aismission from my service, set up shop for herself. I had not lived many weeks in my new habitation, when my perfecutor renewed his attempts to make himself master of my person: but I had learned from experience to redouble my vigilance, and he was fruftrated in all his endeavours. I was again happy in the conversation of my former acquaintance, and visited by a great number of gentlemen, mostly persons of probity and fenfe, who cultivated my friendship, without any other motive of attachment. Not that I was unfolicited on the article of love: that was a theme on which I never wanted orators; and could I have prevailed upon myself to profit by the advances that were made, I might have managed my opportunities, fo as to have fet fortune at defiance for the future. But I was none of those economists, who can facrifice their hearts to interested considerations,

One evening, while I was conversing with three or four of my friends, my lawyer came in, and told me he had something of consequence to impart: upon which all the gentlemen but one went away. Then he gave me to understand, that my fuit would immediately come to trial; and though he hoped the best, the issue was uncertain; that if it should be given against me, the decision would inspire my lord with fresh spirits to disturb my peace; and therefore it would be convenient for me to retire, until the affair should be brought to a determination.

f I was very much disconcerted at this intelligence; and the gentleman who stayed perceiving my concern, asked what I intended to do, or if he could serve me in any shape, and desired to know whither I proposed to retreat. I affected to laugh, and answered, "To a garret, I believe!" To this over-strained raillery he replied, that if I should, his friendship and regard would find the way to my apartment: and I had no reason to doubt the sincerity of his declaration. We consulted about the measures I should take, and I determined to remove into the country, where I was soon favoured with a letter from him, wherein he expressed the infinite pleasure he had in being able to assure me, that my suit had been successful, and that I might appear again with great fafety.

' Accordingly, I returned to town in his coach and fix, which he had fent for my convenience, and the fame evening went with him to the masquerade, where we paffed the night very agreeably, his fpirits, as well as mine, being elevated to a joyous pitch by the happy event of my process. This gentleman was a person of great honour, worth, and good-nature; he loved me extremely, but did not care that I should know the extent of his passion: on the contrary, he endeavoured to perfuade me he had laid it down as a maxim, that no woman should ever have power enough over his heart, to give him the least pain or disquiet. In short, he had made a progress in my affection, and to his generofity was I indebted for my subfistence two whole years; during which he was continually professing this philofophick indifference, while, at the same time, he was giving me daily affurances of his friendship and esteem, and treating me with inceffant marks of the most paffionate love: fo that I concluded his intention was cold, though his temper was warm, Confidering myfelf as an incumbrance upon his fortune, I redoubled my endeavours to obtain a separate maintenance from my lord, and removed from St. James's Square to lodgings at Kenfington, where I had not long enjoyed my-

lligence;

now

bles,

wifeft

e, he

pofal,

ook a

Bruf-

ed on

erfelf.

ation,

make s fruf-

ppy in

vifited

of pro-

vithout

s unfo-

me on

ve pre-

, fo as

But I

e their

hree or

d me he

n which he gave

ediately

he issue

pirits to nvenient

ight to a

felf in tranquillity, before it was interrupted by a very unexpected visit.

While I was bufy one day dreffing in my diningroom, I found his lordship at my elbow, before I was aware of his approach, although his coach was at the door, and the house already in the possession of his servants. He accosted me in the usual style, as if we had parted the night before; and I answered him with an appearance of the same careless familiarity, desiring him to fit down, while I retreated to my chamber, locked the door, and fairly went to bed; being, perhaps, the first woman who went thither for protection from the infults of a man. Here, then, I immured myself with my faithful Abigail. My lord finding me secured, knocked at the door, and through the key-hole begged to be admitted; affuring me, that all he wanted was a conference. I defired to be excused, though I believed his affurance; but I had no ir clination to converfe with him, because I knew from experience the nature of his conversation, which was so disagreeable and tormenting, that I would have exchanged it at any time for a good beating, and thought myfelf a gainer by the bargain. However, he perfifted in his importunities to fuch a degree, that I affented to his propofal, on condition that the Duke of L-fhould be present at the interview; and he immediately fent a message to his grace, while I in peace ate my breakfast, conveyed in a basket, which was hoisted up to the window of my bed-chamber.

'The duke was so kind as to come at my lord's request, and before I would open the door, gave me his word, that I should be protected from all violence and compulsion. Thus assured, they were permitted to enter. My little gentleman sitting down by my bed-side, began to repeat the old hackneyed arguments he had formerly used, with the view of inducing me to live with him; and I, on my side, repeated my former objections, or pretended to listen to his representations, while my imagination was employed in contriving the means

21

g

er

th

W

eit

de

the

M

thi

pot

gra

col

WO

gre

ter

his

mer

who

ed i

my

of b

ftano

prov

a leg

elfe,

peac

of fo

merl.

Putti

whic

6 ]

means of effecting an escape, as the duke easily perceived by my countenance.

e

d

a

ed

·fe

re

1'-

me

the

ies

on

t at

e to

eyed

my

s re-

e his

e and

ed to

bed-

ts he

o live

er ob-

tions,

ng the

neans.

' Finding all his remonstrances ineffectual, he-quitted the chamber, and left his cause to the eloquence of his grace, who fat with me a whole half hour, without exerting himself much in behalf of his client, because he knew I was altogether obstinate, and determined on that score; but joked on the behaviour of his lordship, who, though jealous of most people, had left him alone with me in my bed-chamber, observing, that he must either have great confidence in his virtue, or a very bad opinion of him otherwise. In short, I found means to defer the categorical answer till next day, and invited the duke and his lordship to dine with me to-morrow. My wife yoke-fellow feemed to doubt the fincerity of this invitation, and was very much disposed to keep possession of my house: but, by the persuasions of his grace, and the advice of H-n, who was his chief counsellor and back, he was prevailed upon to take my word, and for the prefent left me.

They were no fooner retired, than I arose with great expedition, packed up my cloaths, and took shelter in Essex, for the first time. Next day, my lord and his noble friend came to dinner, according to appointment; and being informed of my escape by my woman, whom I had left in the house, his lordship discovered some signs of discontent, and insisted upon seeing my papers; upon which my maid produced a parcel of bills which I owed to different people. Notwithstanding this disappointment, he sat down to what was provided for dinner, and with great deliberation eat up a leg of lamb, the best part of a fowl, and something the, which I do not now remember; and then very peaceably went away, giving my maid an opportunity of following me to the place of my retreat.

'My intention was to have fought refuge, as formerly, in another country; but I was prevented from putting my design in execution by a fit of illness, during which I was visited by my physician and some of my own relations, particularly a distant cousin of mine, whom my lord had engaged in his interests, by promising to recompense her amply, if she could persuade me to comply with his desire. In this office she was affisted by the doctor, who was my friend, and a man of sense, for whom I have the most persect esteem, though he and I have often differed in point of opinion. In a word, I was exposed to the incessant importunities of all my acquaintance, which added to the desperate circumstances of my fortune, compelled me to embrace the terms that were offered, and I again returned to the domestick duties of a wife.

I was conducted to my lord's house by an old friend of mine, a gentleman turned of fifty, of admirable parts and understanding; he was a pleasing companion, chearful and humane, and had acquired a great share of my esteem and respect. In a word, his advice had great weight in my deliberations, because it seemed to be the refult of experience and difinterested friendship. Without all doubt, he had an unfeigned concern for my welfare; but being an admirable politician, his scheme was to make my interest coincide with his own inclinations; for I had unwittingly made an innovation upon his heart; and as he thought I should hardly favour his passion while I was at liberty to converse with the rest of my admirers, he counfelled me to furrender that freedom, well knowing that my lord would be eafily perfuaded to banish all his rivals from the house; in which cause he did not doubt of his being able to infinuate himself into my affections; because he laid it down as an eternal truth, that if any two persons of different sexes were obliged to live together in a defart, where they would be excluded from all other human intercourse, they would naturally and inevitably contract an inclination for each other.

'How just this hypothesis may be, I leave to the determination of the curious; though, if I may be allowed to judge, from my own disposition, a couple so situated would be apt to imbibe mutual disgusts, from the na ture

tu

wa

wh

du

hin

did

lefs

car

was

any

han

alw.

we:

was

conc

that

twic

with

acco

confi

made

the o

fuch

all m fterna

a goo

vited

used.

and h

mife;

Tunb

exami

by ou

overtu

My lo

aunit .

"T

6

ture and necessity of their union; unless their association was at first the effect of reciprocal affection and esteem. Be this as it will, I honour the gentleman for his plan, which was ingeniously contrived, and artfully conducted; but I happened to have too much address for him in the sequel, cunning as he was, though at first I did not perceive his drift; and his lordship was much less likely to comprehend his meaning.

0

ld

r-

n-

eat

ice

ned

nd-

on-

oli-

cide

nade

ht I

erty

oun-

that

his

oubt

affec-

that

red to

luded

urally

her.

he de-

llowed

tuated

he na

ture

Immediately after this new accommodation, I was carried to a country-house belonging to my lord, and was simple enough to venture myself (unattended by any fervant on whose integrity I could depend) in the hands of his lordship and H-n, whose villainy I always dreaded; though at this time my apprehensions were confiderably increased, by recollecting, that it was not his interest to let me live in that house, lest his conduct flould be enquired into; and by remembering, that the very house to which we were going, had been twice burned down in a very short space of time, not without fuspicion of his having been the incendiary, on account of some box of writings which was lost in the conflagration. True it is, this imputation was never made good; and perhaps he was altogether innocent of the charge, which nevertheless affected my spirits in fuch a manner, as rendered me the most miserable of In this terror did I remain, till my conall mortals. flernation was weakened by the arrival of Mr. Bala good-natured worthy man, whom my lord had invited to his house, and I thought would not see me ill In a few weeks we were joined by Dr. Sand his lady, who visited us according to their promife; and it was resolved that we should set out for Tunbridge on a party of pleasure, and at our return examine H-n's accounts.

'This last part of our scheme was not at all relished by our worthy steward, who therefore determined to overturn our whole plan, and succeeded accordingly. My lord all of a sudden declared himself against the sumt we had projected, and insisted upon my staying at home, without affigning any reason for this peremptory behaviour; his countenance being cloudy, and for the space of three days he did not open his mouth.

At last, he one night entered my bed-chamber, to which he now had free access, with his fword under his arm, and if I remember aright, it was ready drawn: I could not help taking notice of this alarming circumftance, which shocked me the more, as it happened immediately after a gloomy fit of discontent. However, I feemed to overlook the incident, and difmiffing my maid, went to bed; because I was ashamed to acknowledge, even to my own heart, any dread of a person whom I despised so much. However, the strength of my constitution was not equal to the fortitude of my mind: I was taken ill, and the fervants were obliged to be called up; while my lord himself, terrified at my fituation, ran up stairs to Mrs. S-, who was in bed; told her, with evident perturbation of spirits, that I was very much indisposed, and said, he believed I was frighted by his entering my chamber with his fword in his hand.

This lady was fo startled at his information, that the ran into my apartment half naked, and as the went down ftairs, asked what reason could induce him to have carried his fword with him. Upon which he gave her to understand, that his intention was to kill the I believe and hope he had no other defign than that of intimidating me, but when the affair happened I was of a different opinion. Mrs. S- having put on her cloaths, fat up all night by my bed-fide, and was fo good as to affure me, that fhe would not leave me until I should be fafely delivered from the apprehension that surrounded me in this house, to which she and the doctor had been the principal cause of my coming; for my lord had haunted and importuned them incessantly on this subject, protesting that he loved me with the most inviolable affection; and all he defired was, that I would fit at his table, manage his family, and fliare his fortune. By these professions, uttered with himf earth him great ledge quair know place and t cerne with pleafi out w ponde cumft This refolv of us drunk cles of from : was l 'T which cation fervan in his legall autho

to fuc

puniff Howe

immed racter

his los

Vo

with an air of honesty and good-nature, he had imposed himself upon them for the best tempered creature upon earth; and then used all their influence with me to take him into favour. This hath been the case with a great many people, who had but a superficial knowledge of his disposition; but in the course of their acquaintance they have never failed to discern and acknowledge their mistake.

1

ĺ

S

n

to

he

an ed

ut

ve

re-

the

m-

em

nie

ily,

red

th

VOL. III.

'The doctor on his return from Tunbridge, to which place he had made a trip by himfelf, found me ill a-bed, and the whole family in confusion: surprized and concerned at this diforder, he entered into expostulation with my lord, who owned, that the cause of his difpleasure and disquiet was no other than jealousy: H-- had informed him, that I had been feen to walk out with Mr. Bal in a morning; and that our correfpondence had been observed, with many additional circumftances which were absolutely false and groundless. This imputation was no fooner understood, than it was refolved that the accuser should be examined in presence of us all. He accordingly appeared, exceedingly drunk, though it was morning, and repeated the articles of the charge as an information he had received from a man who came from town to hang the bells, and was long ago returned to London.

This was an inftance of his cunning and address, which did not forsake him even in his hours of intoxication. Had he fixed the calumny on any one of the servants, he would have been confronted and detected in his falshood. Nevertheless, though he could not be legally convicted, it plainly appeared that he was the author of this defamation, which incensed Mr. Balto such a degree, that he could scarce be witheld from punishing him on the spot by manual chastissment. However he was prevailed upon to abstain from such immediate vengeance, as a step unworthy of his character; and the affair was brought to this issue, that his bordship should either part with me or Mr. H.

for I was fully determined against living under the fame roof with fuch an incendiary.

This alternative being proposed, my lord dismissed his steward, and we returned to town with the doctor and Mrs. S-; for I had imbibed fuch horror and aversion for this country-seat (though one of the pleafantest in England) that I could not bear to live in it. We therefore removed to a house in Bond Street, where, according to the advice of my friends, I exerted my whole power and complainance, in endeavours to keep my husband in good-humour; but was so unfuccessful in my attempts, that if ever he was worsetempered, more capricious, or intolerable, at one time than at another, this was the feafon in which his illhumour predominated to the most rancorous degree. I was scarce ever permitted to stir abroad, faw nobody at home but my old male friend whom I have mentioned above, and the doctor with his lady, from whose conversation also I was at last excluded.

Nevertheless, I contrived to steal a meeting now and then with my late benefactor, for whom I entertained a great share of affection, exclusive of that gratitude which was due to his generofity. It was not his fault that I compromised matters with my lord; for he was as free of his purfe as I was unwilling to use it. It would, therefore, have been unfriendly, unkind, and ungrateful in me, (now that I was in affluence) to avoid all intercourse with a man who had supported me in adversity. I think people cannot be too shy and scrupulous in receiving favours; but when once they are conferred, they ought never to forget the obligation: and I was never more concerned at any incident of my life, than at hearing that this gentleman did no receive a letter, in which I acknowledged the last proo of his friendship and liberality which I had occasion to use, because I have fince learned that he suspected m of neglect.

But to return to my fituation in Bond Street. bore it as well as I could for the space of three months during dur emp mor flict. tyra be je incu my v my e failed whic. I ftro by re mente fullen

· H munic ing th longer my fat the ful going happer lo viole afraid when h tick wi was act · Th resolutio quarters lodged v message my lord reasons f felf again Separatio fure as a during which I lived in the midst of spies, who were employed to watch my conduct, and underwent every mortification that malice, power, and folly, could inflict. Nay, so ridiculous, so unreasonable was my tyrant in his spleen, that he declared he would even be jealous of Heydigger, if there was no other man to incur his suspicion. He expected that I would spend my whole time with him, tête-à-tête: when I sacrificed my enjoyment to these comfortable parties, he never failed to lay hold on some innocent expression of mine, which he made the soundation of a quarrel; and when I strove to avoid these disagreeable misinterpretations, by reading or writing, he incessantly teazed and tormented me with the imputation of being peevish, sullen, and reserved.

'Harrassed by this infusserable behaviour, I communicated my case to Dr. S—— and his lady, intimating that I neither could nor would expose myself any longer to such usage. The doctor exhorted me to bear my fate with patience, and Mrs. S—— was silent on the subject; so that I still hesitated between staying and going; when the doctor, being one night at supper, happened to have some words with my lord, who was so violently transported with passion, that I was actually assaid of going to bed with him; and next morning when he awaked, there was such an expression of frantick wildness in his countenance, that I imagined he was actually diftracted.

N

1-

ot 1;

ise

to

me

ind

ney

ga-

en

no

rco

n to

ing

'This alarming circumstance confirmed me in my resolution of decamping; and I accordingly moved my quarters to a house in Sackville Street, where I had lodged when I was a widow. From thence I sent a message to the Duke of L—, desiring he would make my lord acquainted with the place of my abode, my reasons for removing, and my intention to defend myself against all his attempts. The first night of this separation I went to bed by myself, with as much pleasure as a man would feel in going to bed to his mistress, whom he had long folicited in vain; fo rejoiced was I to be delivered from my obnoxious bedfellow!

0 2

From these lodgings I soon moved to Brook Street, where I had not long enjoyed the sweets of my escape, when I was importuned to return, by a new steward whom my lord had engaged in the room of H—n. This gentleman, who bore a very fair character, made such indicious representations, and behaved so candidly in the discharge of his function, that agreed he should act as umpire in the difference betwixt us; and once more a reconciliation was effected, though his lordship began to be dissatisfied even before the execution of our agreement, in consequence of which he attended me to Bath, whither I went for the benefit of my health, which was not a little impaired.

This accommodation had a furprizing effect upon my lover; who, notwithstanding his repeated declarations, that no woman should ever gain such an ascendancy over his heart as to be able to give him pain, suffered all the agonies of disappointed love, when he now found himself deprived of the opportunities of seeing me, and behaved very differently from what he had imagined he should: his words and actions were desperate; one or his expressions to me was, "It is like twisting my heart-strings, and tearing it out of my body." Indeed I should never have acted this part, had I foreseen what he would have suffered; but I protest I believed him when he said otherwise, so much, that his declaration on that subject was the occasion of my giving him up; and it was now too late to retract.

'In our expedition to the Bath, I was accompanied by a very agreeable young lady, with whom I passed my time very happily, amid the diversions of the place, which screened me, in a good measure, from the vexatious society of my hopeful partner. From this place we repaired to his seat in the country, where we spent a few months, and thence returned again to our house in Bond Street. Here, while I was consined to my bed by illness, it was supposed my indisposition was no other roof him

ment
If his
took nifeft
recov
comp
tented
humo
by or made

·I

with I necessified all methan operfect his homity, disposition of the control of

I felt

always
Mr. B
an intiment ovaluaborname enjoyee
the cor
experie
lieve m dict the

erms 1

other than a private lying-in, though I was under the roof with my lord, and attended by his fervants.

While the distemper continued, my lord (to do him justice) behaved with all imaginable tenderness and care; and his concern on these occasions I have already mentioned, as a strange inconsistency in his disposition. If his actions were at all accountable, I should think he took pains to fret me into a fever first, in order to manifest his love and humanity afterwards. When I recovered my strength and spirits, I went abroad, saw company, and should have been easy, had he been contented; but as my satisfaction increased, his good-humour decayed, and he banished from his house, one by one, all the people whose conversation could have made my life agreeable.

'I often expostulated with him upon his malignant behaviour, protesting my desire of living peaceably with him, and begging he would not lay me under the necessity of changing my measures. He was deaf to all my remonstrances, (though I warned him more than once of the event;) persisted in his maxims of persecution; and after repeated quarrels, I again left his house, fully determined to suffer all sorts of extremity, rather than subject myself to the tyranny of his disposition.

1

-

,

e

of

re

is

ly

rt,

0-

h,

of

et.

ed

ied

ce,

xa-

ace

ent

uie

bed

110

er

This year was productive of one fatal event, which I felt with the utmost sensibility of forrow, and I shall always remember with regret: I mean the death of Mr. B——, with whom I had constantly maintained an intimate correspondence since the first commencement of our acquaintance. He was one of the most valuable men, and promised to be one of the brightest enaments that this or any other age had produced. I enjoyed his friendship without reserve; and such was the considence he reposed in my integrity, from long experience of my truth, that he often said he would believe my bare affertion, even though it should contradict the evidence of his own senses. These being the terms upon which we lived, it is not to be supposed that I bore the loss of him without repining: indeed my grief was unspeakable; and though the edge of it be now smoothed by the lenient hand of Time, I shall never cease to cherish his memory with the most tender remembrance.

During the last period of my living with my lord, I had agreed to the expediency of obtaining an act of parliament, which would enable him to pay his debts; on which occasion there was a necessity for cancelling a deed that subsisted between us, relating to a separate maintenance; to which, on certain provisions I was intitled: and this was to be fet afide, to far as it interfered with the abovementioned scheme, while the rest of it should remain in force. While this affair was about to be transacted, my lord very generously insisted upon my concurrence, in annulling the whole fettlement; and when I refused to comply with this demand, because this was the sole resource I had against his illusage, he would not proceed in the execution of his plan, though by dropping it he hurt nobody but himfelf; and he accused me of having receded from my word, after I had drawn him into a confiderable expence.

'This imputation of breaking my word, which I defy the whole world to prove I ever did, incenfed me the more, as I myself had proposed the scheme for his fervice, although I knew the accomplishment of it would endanger the validity of my own fettlement; and my indignation was still more augmented by the behaviour of Mr. G-n, who had always professed a regard for my interest, and upon my last accommodation with my lord, undertaken to effect a reconciliation between my father and me: but when he was questioned about the particulars of this difference, and defired to declare whether his lordship or I was to blame, he declined the office of arbitrator, refused to be explicit upon the subject, and by certain shrewd hum's and ha's, fignified his disapprobation of my conduct. Yet this very man, when I imparted to him, in confidence,

mi

afk

if

ter

bu

w!

bu

for ly

gi

hi

ha

ad

m

ho

fa

m

al

th

ra

in

fp

W

in

th

m

bl

ef

hi

P

my intention of making another retreat, and frankly asked his opinion of my design, seemed to-acquiesce in the justice of it in these remarkable words. " Madam, if I thought, or had hopes of my lord's growing better, I would down on my knees to defire you to flay;

but as I have not, I fay nothing."

r

f

e

1-

-

st

18

d

-9

1-

is

n-

y

X-

I

ne

iis it

nd

a-·e-

on

e-

ed

to e-

cit

nd et

ce,

y

'If he connived at my conduct in this particular, why should he disapprove of it, when all I asked was but common justice? But he was a dependant; and therefore I excuse his phlegmatick (not to call it unfriendly) behaviour. Indeed he could not be too cautious of giving offence to his lord hip, who fometimes made him feel the effects of that wrath which other people had kindled; particularly, in confequence of a small adventure which happened about this very period of time.

'A very agreeable, sprightly, good-natured young man, a near relation of my lord, happened to be at our house one evening, when there was a fire in the neighbourhood; we agreed to go and fup at a tavern, en famille; and having spent the evening with great mirth and good-humour, this young gentleman, who was naturally facetious, in taking his leave, faluted us all round. My lord, who had before entertained fome jealousy of his kinsman, was very much provoked by this triffing incident, but very prudently suppressed his displeasure till he returned to his own house, where his rage co-operating with the Champagne he had drank, inflamed him to fuch a degree of resolution, that he forung upon the innocent G--n, and collared him with great fury, though he was altogether unconcerned in the cause of his indignation.

'This extravagant and frantick behaviour, added to the other grievances under which I laboured, haftened my resolution of leaving him; and he to this day blames his relation, as the immediate cause of my escape, whereas he ought to place it to the account of his own madness and indiscretion. When I retired to Park Street, he cautioned all my tradefmen (not even

excepting

excepting my baker) against giving me credit, affuring them that he would not pay any debts I should contract; and the difficulties to which I was reduced, in consequence of this charitable declaration, together with the reslection of what I had suffered, and might undergo, from the caprice and barbarity of his disposition, affected my health so much, that I was taken again ill, and my life thought in danger.

'My constitution, however, got the better of my distemper, and I was ordered into the country by my physicians, for the benefit of the air; so that I found myself under the necessity of keeping two houses, when I was little able to support one, and set up my chariot, because I could not defray the expence of a hackney-coach; for I had as much credit given me as I asked for, notwithstanding my lord's orders to the contrary.

'Having recruited my spirits in the country, I returned to town, and was visited by my friends, who never forsook me in adversity; and in the summer removed to a house in Eslex, where I lived a few months in great tranquillity, unmolested by my tyrant, who sometimes gave me a whole year's respite. Here I used to ride and drive by turns (as my humour dictated) with horses which were lent me; and I had the company of my lover, and another gentleman, who was a very agreeable companion, and of singular service to me in the sequel.

At last, my lord having received intelligence of the place of my abode, and his tormenting humour recurring, he set out for my habitation, and in the morning appeared in his coach and six, attended by Mr. G—n, and another person, whom he had engaged for the purpose, with several domesticks armed. I immediately that up my doors at his approach, and refused him admittance, which he endeavoured to obtain by a succession of prayers and threats; but I was deaf to both, and resolved to hold out to the last. Seeing me determined, he began his attack, and his servants actually forced their way into the house; upon which I retreated u whic door room manc my le migh replie reque der, ] tion t with lord, to me both own them for, a ·I fittin with ment my a take of me his an next that I bench of m and o cafe, than

toget

the c cham

ed up flairs, and fortified myself in my apartment, which the affailants stormed with such sury, that the door began to give way, and I retired into another room.

"Whilft I remained in this post, Mr. G——n demanded a parley, in which he begged I would favour my lord with an interview, otherwise he knew not what might be the consequence. To this remonstrance I replied, that I was not disposed to comply with his request; and that though their design should be murder, I was not at all assaid of death. Upon this declaration they renewed their attacks, which they carried on with indifferent success till the afternoon, when my lord, (as if he had been at play) sent a formal message to me, desiring that all hostilities should cease, till after both parties should have dined. At the same time, my own servants came for instructions; and I ordered them to let him have every thing which he should call for, as far as the house could afford.

'He did not fail to make use of this permission; but, sitting down with his companions, eat up my dinner without hesitation, after he had paid me the compliment of desiring to know what he should send up to my apartment. Far from having any stomach to partake of his meal, I sat solitary upon my bed, in a state of melancholy expectation, having sastened the door of the outward room for my security, while I kep my chamber open for the convenience of air, the weather being excessively hot.

'His lordship having indulged his appetite, resumed his attempt, and all of a sudden I heard a noise in the next room; upon which I started up, and perceiving that he had got into my anti-chamber, by the help of a bench that stood under the window, I stung-to the door of my room, which I locked with great expedition, and opened another that communicated with the staircase, ran out of the house, through a crowd of more than a hundred people, whom this fray had gathered together.

'Being

Being univerfally beloved in the neighbourhood, and respected by my lord's servants, I passed among them untouched, and took refuge in a neighbouring cottage; while his lordship bawled and roared for affiftance, being afraid to come out as he had gone in. Without waiting for his deliberations, I changed cloaths with the poor woman who had given me shelter, and in her blue apron and straw-hat, sallied out into the fields, intending to feek protection at the house of a gentleman not far off, though I was utterly ignorant of the road that led to it. However, it was my good fortune to meet with a farmer, who undertook to conduct me to the place; otherwise I should have missed my way, and in all probability lain in the fields; for, by this time, it was eight o'clock at night.

· Under the direction of this guide, I traversed hedges and ditches, (for I would not venture to travel in the highway, left I should fall into the hands of my purfuer) and after I had actually tumbled in the mire, and walked fix or feven long miles by the help of a good spirit, which never failed me on such occasions, I arrived at the place, and rung the bell at the gardengate for admittance. Seeing my figure, which was very uncouth, together with my draggled condition, they denied me entrance; but when they understood who I was, immediately opened the door, and I was hospitably entertained, after having been the subject of mirth, on account of my drefs and adventure. 'Next day I returned and took possession of my house again, where I refumed my former amusements, which I enjoyed in quiet for the space of a whole month, waiting with refignation for the iffue of my law-fuit; when one afternoon I was apprized of his lordship's approach by one of my spies, whom I always employed to reconnoitre the road; and fo fortunate was I in the choice of these scouts, that I never was betrayed by one of them, though they were often bribed for that purpole.

I no fooner received this intelligence, than I ordered my ho fight in from 1 this tra by a fi folved fhould ficulty at the being tection

· T bring under turned all m papers had a that 1 thoug diftan after : a char tende armed piftol any p upon weap tinde tion, much myfe fatal get n right divid fet of little my horse to be saddled, and mounting, rode out of fight immediately, directing my course a different way from the London road. I had not long proceeded in this track, when my career was all of a sudden stopped by a five-bar gate, which, after some hesitation, I resolved to leap, (my horse being an old hunter) if I should find myself pursued. However, with much difficulty I made a shift to open it, and arrived in safety at the house of my very good friend Mr. G——, who being a justice of the peace, had promised me his protection, if it should be wanted.

'Thus fecured for the present, I sent out spies to bring information of his lordship's proceedings, and understood that he had taken possession of my house, turned my servants adrift, and made himself master of all my moveables, cloaths, and papers. As for the papers, they were of no consequence, but of cloaths I had a good flock: and when I had reason to believe that he did not intend to relinquish his conquest, I thought it was high time for me to remove to a greater distance from his quarters. Accordingly, two days after my escape, I set out at eleven o'clock at night, in a chariot and four, which I borrowed of my friend, attended by a footman, who was a flout fellow and well armed, I myself being provided with a brace of good pistols, which I was fully determined to use against any person who should presume to lay violent hands upon me, except my lord, for whom a less mortal weapon would have fufficed, fuch as a bodkin or a tinder-box. Nothing could be farther from my intention, than the defire of hurting any living creature, much less my husband; my defign was only to defend myself from cruelty and oppression, which I knew, by fatal experience, would infallibly be my lot, should he get me into his power; and I thought I had as good a right to preferve my happiness as that which every individual has to preserve his life, especially against a. let of ruffians, who were engaged to rob me of it for 2 little dirty lucre.

' In the midst of our journey, the footman came up, and told me I was dogged; upon which I looked out. and feeing a man riding by the chariot-fide, prefented one of my pistols out of the chariot window, and preferved that posture of defence until he thought proper to retreat, and rid me of the fears that attended his company. I arrived in town, and changing my equipage, hired an open chaife, in which (though I was almost starved with cold) I travelled to Reading, which I reached by ten next morning; and from thence proceeded farther in the country, with a view of taking refuge with Mrs. C---, who was my particular friend. Here I should have found shelter, though my lord had been before-hand with me, and endeavoured to prepoffers her against my conduct, had not the house been crouded with company, among whom I could not possibly have been concealed, especially from her brother, who was an intimate friend of my perfecutor.

'Things being thus fituated, I enjoyed but a very fhort interview with her, in which her forrow and perplexity on my account appeared with great expression in her countenance; and though it was not in her power to afford me the relief I expected, she in the most genteel manner sent after me a small sum of money, thinking that, confidering the hurry in which I left my house, I might have occasion for it on the road. I was by this time benumbed with cold, fatigued with travelling, and almost fretted to death by my disappointment. However, this was no time to indulge despondence; since nobody could or would affist me, I stood the more in need of my own resolution and prefence of mind. After fome deliberation, I fleered my course back to London; and being unwilling to return by the same road in which I came, as well as impatient to be at the end of my journey, I chose the Bagshol way, and ventured to crofs the heath by moon-light.

'Here I was attacked by a footpad armed with a broad fword, who came up and demanded my money My flock amounted to twelve guineas; and I forefaw

Sumeno

the for field ord effect pre my cha

hav

an i

th

tra

the to f fupp who Work faith nam during abroof m wear noble littlethis che w rence tition were chief countil mind,

that

that should I be stripped of the whole sum, I could not travel without discovering who I was, and confequently running the risk of being detected by my pursuer. On these considerations I gave the fellow three guineas and some silver; with which he was so far from being satisfied, that he threatened to search me for more: but I ordered the coachman to proceed, and by good fortune steaped that ceremony; though I was under some apprehension of being overtaken with a pistol-bullet in my flight, and therefore held down my head in the chaise, in imitation of some great men, who are said to have ducked in the same manner in the day of battle.

My fears happened to be disappointed. I lay at an inn upon the road, and next day arrived in town, in the utmost dissiculty and distress; for I knew not where to fix my habitation, and was destitute of all means of support. In this dilemma, I applied to my lawyer, who recommended me to the house of a tradesiman in Westminster, where I lodged and boarded upon my saithful Abigail, (whom I shall distinguish by the name of Mrs. S—r) for the space of ten weeks, during which I saw nobody, and never once stirred abroad.

S

S

h

)-

ar

W

ed

ife

ot

-0

ery

er-

ion

her

the

of

ch I

oad.

with

ifap-

ulge

ne, I

pre-

d my

eturi

atient

igiho

ght.

vith

noney

refaw

that

While I was thus harrassed out of all enjoyment of life, and reduced to the utmost indigence, by the cruelty of my persecutor, who had even stripped me of my wearing apparel, I made a conquest of Lord D——, a nobleman who is now de d, and therefore I shall say little-of his character, which is persectly well known: this only will I observe, that next to my own tyrant, he was the person of whom I had the greatest abhorrence. Nevertheless, when these two came in competition, I preferred the offers of this new lover, which were very considerable; and as an asylum was the thief thing I wanted, agreed to follow him to his country seat, whither I actually sent my cloaths, which I had purchased upon credit.

'However, upon mature deliberation, I changed my mind, and fignified my resolution in a letter, desiring Vol. III.

at the fame time, that my baggage might be fent back. In confequence of this message, I expected a visit from him, in all the rage of indignation and disappointment, and gave orders that he should not be admitted into my house: yet, notwithstanding this precaution, he found means to procure entrance; and one of the first objects that I faw next morning in my bed-chamber, was my lover, armed with his horsewhip, against which (from the knowlege of the man) I did not think myfelf altogether fecure; though I was not much alarmed. because I believed myself superior to him in point of bravery, should the worst come to the worst; but, contrary to my expectation, and his usual behaviour to our fex, he accosted me very politely, and began to expostulate upon the contents of my letter. I freely told him, that I had rashly affented to his proposal, for my own convenience only; that when I reflected on what I had done, I thought it ungenerous in me to live with him upon these terms; and that, as I did not like him, and could not diffemble, fuch a correspondence could never tend to the fatisfaction of either. He allowed the inference was just, though he was very much chagrined at my previous proceeding: he relinquished his claim, reftored my cloaths, and never afterwards upbraided me with my conduct in this affair; though he at one time owned, that he still loved me, and ever should, because I had used him ill: a declaration that strongly marks the peculiarity of his character. As for my own part, I own that my behaviour on this occasion is no other way excusable, than on account of the miserable perplexity of my circumstances, which were often fo calamitous, that I wonder I have not been compelled to take fuch steps as would have rendered my conduct much more exceptionable than it really is.

At last all my hopes were blasted by the iffue of my suit, which was determined in favour of my lord. Even then I resused to yield; on the contrary, coming out of retirement, I took lodgings in Suffolk Street,

and 211

to

an

the

fur

inc

tha

of .

fuc

Io

my

to 1

pro

flav

one

wer

mfi

all e

fhor

men

then

they

the

each

quai

char

wit,

guiff

great

requi

infin

lhare

tions

favor

thing

elegal

thous

agree:

and fet my tyrant at defiance. But, being unwilling to trust my doors to the care of other people, I hired an house in Conduit Street; and no sooner appeared in the world again, than I was furrounded by divers and fundry forts of admirers. I believe I received the incense and addresses of all kinds under the fun, except that fort which was most to my liking, a man capable of contracting and inspiring a mutual attachment; but fuch a one is equally rare and inestimable: not but that I own myfelf greatly obliged to all those who cultivated my good graces, though they were very little beholden to me; for where I did not really love, I could never profess that passion; that fort of dissimulation is a flavery that no honest nature will undergo. Except one worthy young man whom I fometimes faw, they were a strange medley of infignificant beings; one was infipid, another ridiculously affected; a third void of all education; a fourth altogether inconfiftent; and, in fhort, I found as many trifling characters among the men, as ever I observed in my own fex. Some of them I endeavoured to bring over to my maxims, while they attempted to make a profelyte of me; but finding the talk impractical on both sides, we wisely dropped each other.

h

ld

ed

ch

ed

ds

gh

ver

nat

As

his

t of

ich

not

en-

1 it

e of

ord-

ning

reet,

At length, however, I was bleffed with the acquaintance of one nobleman, who is, perhaps, the first character in England, in point of honour, integrity, wit, sense, and benevolence: when I have thus distinguished him, I need scarce mention Lord——. This great, this good man, possesses every accomplishment requisite to inspire admiration, love, and esteem. With infinitely more merit than almost ever fell to one man's share, he manifests such disadence of his own qualifications, as cannot fail to preposses every company in his savour. He seems to observe nothing, yet sees every thing; his manner of telling a story, and making trifles degant, is peculiar to himself; and though he has a thousand oddities, they serve only to make him more agreeable. After what I have said, it may be supposed that I was enamoured of his person: but this was not the case: love is altogether capricious and funciful; yet I admire, honour, and efteem him to the highest degree; and when I observe that his character resembled that of my dear departed friend Mr. B ---, or rather, that Mr. B --- , had he lived, would have refembled Lord both to the living and the dead.

In this nobleman's friendship and conversation I thought myfelf happy; though I was, as ufual, exposed to the indefatigable efforts of my lord, who, one day, while I was favoured with the company of this generous friend, appeared at my door in his coach, attended by another gentleman, who demanded entrance with an air of authority. A very honest footman, who had been long in my fervice, ran up stairs in the utmost consternation, and gave me an account of what had happened below. Upon which, I told him he had nothing to answer for, and ordered him to keep the door fast shut against all opposition: though I was so much affected with this unexpected affault, that Lord -faid, he was never more furprized and shocked in his life, than at the horror which appeared in my countenance, when I faw the coach stop at the door.

' My little hero being refused admittance, went away, threatening to return speedily with a reinforcement; and during this interval, I provided myfelf with a foldier, whom I placed centinel at the door, within fide, to guard me from the danger of fuch affaults for the future. My lord, true to his promife, marched back with his auxiliaries, reinforced with a constable, and repeated his demand of being admitted; and my foldier opening the fash, in order to answer him, according to my direction, he no fooner perceived the red coat, than he was feized with fuch a panick; that he instantly fled with great precipitation; and when he recounted the adventure, like Falftaff in the play, multiplied my guard into a whole file of musqueteers. He also made a shift to discover the gentleman, who had been comp feein pecta 6]

been

peace difqu fpirit refug rant. the a for; hunte remo nneaf my fi invad and y was v way ( comm man : W2S 17 in file my fo me wi fent a

"I good lage, : and pa of five fion w The f to gra lived i

which

them,

'I

been so kind as to lend me one of his company, and complained of him to the Duke of N.—, in hopes of seeing him broke for his misdemeanor; but in that expectation he was luckily disappointed.

' Perceiving that in England I should never enjoy peace, but be continually subject to those alarms and disquiets which had already impaired my health and fpirits, I resolved to repair again to France, my best refuge and fure retreat from the perfecution of my tyrant. Yet, before I took this step, I endeavoured, by the advice of my friends, to conceal myself near Windfor; but was in a little time discovered by my lord, and hunted out of my lurking-place accordingly. I then removed to Chelfea, where I fuffered inconceiveable measures and agitation of mind, from the nature of my fituation. My tranquillity being thus incessantly invaded by a man who could not be fatisfied with me, and yet could not live without me: fo that, though I was very much indisposed, I set out for France, by the way of the Hague, as the war had shut up all other communication, having no other attendant but my woman S-r; who, though the dreaded the sea, and was upon the brink of matrimony, would not quit me in fuch a calamitous condition, until I was joined by my footman and other maid, whom I ordered to follow me with the baggage. But, before my departure, I fent a meffage to Lord ---, demanding my cloaths, which he had feized in Effex; and he refufing to deliver them, I was obliged to equip myfelf anew upon credit.

'I was supplied with money for my journey by my good friend L—; and after a short and pleasant passage, arrived at the Hague, where I staid two months, and parted with S—r, on whom I settled an annuity of five and twenty pounds, payable out of the provision which I had or might obtain from my husband. The same allowance had I prevailed upon Lord B—to grant to another maid, who attended me while I lived in his house.

1

1

d

110

1

is

ent

e-

th

in

for

red

ile,

my

ac-

the

hat

1 he

nul-

He

had

een

' I did not much relish the people in Holland, because they seemed entirely devoted to self-interest, without any taste for pleasure or politeness; a species of disposition that could not be very agreeable to me, who always despised money, had an unbounded benevolence of heart, and loved pleasure beyond every other consideration.—When I say pleasure, I would not be understood to mean sensuality, which constitutes the supreme happiness of those only who are void of sentiment and imagination. Nevertheless, I received some civilities in this place; and among the rest, the reputation of having for my lover the King of P——'s minister, who was young and airy, and visited me often; circumstances that were sufficient to lay me under the imputation of an amour, which I frequently incurred without having given the least cause of suspicion.

'Having taken leave of my Dutch friends, I departed from the Hague, in company with an English woman, whom I had chosen for that purpose, and arrived at Antwerp, with much difficulty and danger, the highway being infefted with robbers. After having reposed myself a few days in this city, I hired a coach for myfelf, and fet out with my companion for Bruffels; but before we reached Mechlin, our vehicle was attacked by two huffars, who, with their fabres drawn, obliged the coachman to drive into a wood near the road. I at first imagined they wanted to examine our passports, but was soon too well convinced of their defign; and though very much shocked at the discovery, found resolution enough to suppress my concern, so that it should not aggravate the terrors of the young woman, who had almost died with apprehension. I even encouraged her to hope for the best; and addresting myfelf to the robbers in French, begged in the most suppliant manner that they would spare our lives; upon which one of them, who was a little fellow, affured me in the same language, that we had nothing to fear for our persons.

When we were conveyed in a flate of dreadful sufpenie above three quarters of a mile into the wood,

1,0

th

w

lai

ing

pa

m

fle

it

fre

ret

W

th

for

tw

2 5

tu

of

ha

anı

fee

all

fort

lad

had

to

not

fort

mag

the

My

fear

that

the

road

I di

Ire

the suffians came into the coach, and taking my keys, which I kept ready in my hand for them, opened three large trunks that contained my baggage, and emptying them of every thing but my hoops and a few books, packed up their booty in a cloth; then robbed me of my money and jewels, even to my shoe-buckles, and sleeve-buttons, took my footman's laced hat, and gave it by way of gratification, to a peasant, who came from behind the bushes, and affished them in packing.

.

e

S

,

-

ıt

e-

fh

1-

ı,

V-

a

for*

cle

res

ear

ine

reir

co-

1111,

I

eff-

nost

up-

ured

fear ful-

ood, the

'This affair being dispatched, they ordered us to return to the road by a different way from that in which we were carried into the wood; and mounting their horses, rode off with the plunder, though not before the little fellow, who was the least ferocious of the two, had come and shaken me by the hand, wishing us a good journey; a compliment which I heartily returned, being extremely well pleased with the retreat of two fuch companions, who had detained us a whole half hour; during which, notwithstanding the assurance I had received, I was in continual apprehension of feeing their operation concluded with the murder of us all; for I suppose they were of that gang, who had fome time before murdered a French officer, and used a Day extremely ill, after having rifled her of all the had.

Having thus undergone pillage, and being reduced to the extremity of indigence in a foreign land, it is not to be supposed that my reflections were very comfortable; and yet, though I sustained the whole damage, I was the only person in the company who bore the accident with any resolution and presence of mind. My coachman and valet seemed quite terrified with fear; and it was not till I had repeated my directions, that the former drove farther into the wood, and took the first turning to the right, in order to regain the road, according to the command of the robbers, which I did not chuse to disober.

'This misfortune I fuffered by the misinformation I received at Antwerp, where I would have provided

cti

do

wa.

wh

mv

chi

CIII

fh!

fea

ha

hir

tha

WI

an

I :

COL

ma

not

at .

pas

ter

2072

det

ha

W3

lac

fev

me

mi

as

WI

bil

or

rit

myself with an escort, had not I been assured that there was not the least occasion to put myself to such extraordinary expence: and indeed the robbers took the only half hour in which they could have had an opportunity of plundering us; for we no sooner returned into the highway, than we met with the French artillery coming from Brussels, which was a security to us during the rest of our journey. We were afterwards informed, at a small village, that there was actually a large gang of deserters, who harboured in that wood, from which they made excursions in the neighbourhood, and kept the peasants in continual alarms.

'Having proceeded a little way, we were stopped by the artillery crossing a bridge; and as the train was very long, must have been detained till night, had not a soldier informed me, that if I would take the trouble to come out of my coach, and apply to the commandant, he would order them to halt, and allow me to pass. I took the man's advice, and was by him conducted, with much difficulty, through the crowd to some officers, who seemed scarce to deserve the name; for when I signified my request, they neither rose up, nor desired me to sit down; but bolling in their chairs, with one leg stretched out, asked, with an air of disrespectful raillery, where I was going? and when I answered, "To Paris;" desired to know what I would do there.

'I who am naturally civil, where I am civilly used, and saucy enough where I am treated with disregard, was very much piqued at their insolent and unmannerly behaviour, and began to reply to their impertinent questions very abruptly; so that a very tart dislogue would have ensued, had not the conversation bear interrupted by a tall, thin, genteel, young French nobleman, an officer in the army, who chancing to come in, asked with great politeness what I would please to have. I then repeated my desire, and produced my passports, by which he learned who I was. He immediately gave orders that my coach should pass; and afterwards visited me at Paris, having obtained my permission, mission, and taken my address at parting; while the others, understanding my name and quality, asked pardon for their impolite carriage, which they told me was owing to the representation of the soldier, who gave them to understand that I was a strolling actress.

'I could not help laughing heartily at this mistake, which might have proceeded from the circumstances of my appearance, my footman having been obliged to change hats with the peasant, and myself being without buckles in my shoes, and buttons in my riding shirt, while my countenance still retained marks of the fear, and consusion I had undergone. After all, perhaps the fellow was a droll, and wanted to entertain

hindelf at my expence.

1-

n

-

h

t -

d,

e.

d,

d,

m-

11-

13-

ein

10-

me

10

my

me-

afperm, that I was obliged to take up my lodgings at Mechlin, where I addressed myself to the intendant, giving him an account of the disaster I had met with, and desiring I might have credit at the inn, as our whole company could not raise the value of a six-pence. This gentleman, though a provincial, was polite in his way, and not only granted my request, but invited me to lodge at his own house. I accordingly gave him my company at supper, but did not chuse to sleep in his quarters, because he appeared to be what the French call un vieux debauché.

Next day he fent a trumpet to the general, with a detail of my misfortune, in hopes of retrieving what I had loft; but, notwithstanding all possible fearch, I was rain to put up with my damage, which, in linen, laces, cloaths, and baubles, amounted to upwards of seven hundred pounds: a loss which never deprived me of one moment's rest; for though I lodged at a miserable inn, and lay in a paltry bed, I slept as sound as if nothing extraordinary had happened, after I had written to London and Paris, that the payment of my bills of credit might be stopped. Indeed, I know but of two misfortunes in life capable of depressing my spisits; namely, the loss of health and friends; all others may be prevented or endured. The articles of that calamity which I chiefly regretted, were a picture of Lord W—m, and some inimitable letters from Mr. B—.

'From Mechlin I proceeded to Bruffels, where being known, I got credit for some necessaries, and borrowed twenty guineas to defray the expence of my journey to Paris. Having consulted with my friends about the safest method of travelling through Flanders, I was perfuaded to take places in the public voiture; and accordingly departed, not without fear of finding one part of the country as much infested with robbers as another. Nor were these apprehensions assuaged by the conversation of my fellow-travellers, who being of the lower fort of people, that delight in exaggerating dangers, entertained me all the way with an account of all the robberies and murders which had been committed on that road, with many additional circumstances of their own invention.

After having been two days exposed to this comfortable conversation, among very disagreeable company, which is certainly one of the most disagreeable situations of life, I arrived at Lisle; where, thinking the dangerous part of the journey was now passed, I hired a post-chaise, and in two days more reached Paris, without any further molestation.

Upon my arrival in this capital, I was immediately visited by my old acquaintances, who hearing my disafter, offered me their cloaths, and insisted upon my wearing them, until I could be otherwise provided. They likewise engaged me in parties, with a view of amusing my imagination, that I might not grow melancholy in reflecting upon my loss; and desired me to repeat the particulars of my story forty times over, expressing great surprize at our not being murdered, or ravished at least. As for this last species of outrage, the fear of it never once entered my head, otherwise I should have been more shocked and alarmed than I really was: but it seems this was the chief circum.

Cance

ftan

hel

apt poli

11017

Lin

rap

wit

had

mel

laft

tha

bri

and

du

Iw

ord

COI

con

laft

at f

tha

Eng

din

fipa

En

ior

chi

ous

tho

Ih

im

Cen

rep

par

ing

ceff

france of my companion's apprehension; and I cannot help observing, that an homely woman is always more apt to entertain those fears, than one whose person expoles her to much more imminent danger. However, I now learned, that the risk I run was much greater than limagined it to be, those ruffians being familiarized to rape as well as murder.

that

e of

Mr.

be-

oor-

my

nds

ers,

ure;

ing

bers

by

g of

ting

it of

om-

um-

om-

om-

ible

ing

d, I

Pa-

edi-

my

my

led.

w of

me-

e to

ex-

, or

age,

vile

than um .

nce

'Soon after my appearance in Paris, I was favoured with the addresses of several French lovers; but I never had any tafte for foreigners, or indeed for any amusements of that kind, except fuch as were likely to be lasting, and settled upon a more agreeable footing than that of common gallantry. When I deviated from this principle, my conduct was the effect of compulsion, and therefore I was never eafy under it, having been reduced to the alternative of two evils, the least of which I was obliged to chuse, as a man leaps into the sea, in order to escape from a ship that is on fire.

'Though I rejected their love, I did not refuse their company and conversation; and though my health was confiderably impaired by the shock I received in my last adventure, which was considerably greater than I at first imagined, and affected my companion so much, that she did not recover her spirits till she returned to England: I fay, though I was for fome time a valetudinarian, I enjoyed myself in great tranquillity for the space of ten months, during which I was visited by English, Scotch, and French, of all parties and persuaions; for pleasure is of no faction, and that was the thief object of my purfuit; neither was I so ambitious of being a politician, as to employ my time and houghts upon subjects which I did not understand. I had admirers of all fides, and should have spent my time very much to my liking, had not I felt my funds lentibly diminish, without any prospect of their being repaired; for I had been obliged to lay our a great part of the fum allotted for my subfiftence, in supplying my companion, my fervant, and myfelf, with neceffaries, in lieu of those which we had lost.

· Having

' Having before my eyes the uncomfortable profued of wanting money in a ftrange place, I found myself under the necessity of returning to England, where I had more refources than I could possibly have among foreigners; and with that view wrote to Lord --- 's agents, defiring that I might be enabled to discharge my obligations at Paris, by the payment of my pinmoney. Thus a negociation commenced, and his lordship promised to remit money for the clearance of my Paris debts, which amounted to four hundred pounds: but he would not advance one farthing more. though I gave him to understand, that while he protracted the agreement, I must inevitably be adding to my incumbrance, and that I should be as effectually detained by a debt of twenty pounds as if I owed a thoufand. Notwithstanding all my representations, he would not part with one shilling over the neat fun which I had at first stipulated; so that all my meafures were rendered abortive, and I found it altogether impracticable to execute those resolutions I had formed in his favour.

'Thus did he, for a mere trifle, embarrafs the woman for whom he professes the most unlimited love, and whose principles he pretends to hold in the utmost veneration. Indeed, his confidence in my integrity is not without foundation; for many wives, with one half of my provocation, would have ruined him to all intents and purposes; whereas, notwithstanding all the expences to which I have been exposed by his continual perfecution, he never paid a shilling on my account, except one thousand pounds, exclusive of the small allowance which was my due. In a word, fo much time elapsed before my lord could prevail upon himself to advance the bare four hundred, that I was involved in fresh difficulties, from which I found it impossible to extricate myfelf: and though I had occasion to write a letter to my benefactor Lord -, in which I expressed my acknowledgment for past favours, I could not venture to folicit more; even when I was encouraged by a very obliging answer, wherein he declared that the good qualities of my mind and heart would bind him to me in friendship for ever.

freet

vielf

re I

ong

Sersi

ceof

idred

more,

e pro-

ing to

ly de-

thou-

s, he

t fum

mea-

gether

formed

he wave, and

nost ve-

y is not

half of intents

he ex-

ntinual

ccount,

mall al-

ich time

mielf to

olved in

Mible to write a

expressed

not vell-

raged by a very

While I ruminated on my uncomfortable fituation, which would neither permit me to return to England, nor to flay much longer where I was, a young Englishman of immense fortune took Paris in his way from Italy, accompanied by a most agreeable Scotchman, of very good fense and great vivacity. It was my good or ill fortune to become acquainted with these gentlemen, who having feen me at the opera, expressed a defire of being known to me, and accordingly favoured me with a visit one afternoon, when the brisk North Briton ingrossed the whole conversation; while the other feemed fearful and diffident even to a degree of bashfulness, through which, however, I could discern a delicate fensibility and uncommon understanding. There was in his person, (which was very agreeable) as well as in his behaviour, a certain naiveté that was very pleasing; and at this first interview we relished each other's company fo well, that a fort of intimacy immediately commenced, and was carried on in a fuccession of parties of pleasure, in the course of which I found him fraught with all the tenderness and sentiment that render the heart susceptible of the most refined love; a disposition that immediately made me partial to him, while it subjected his own heart to all the violent impressions of a passion, which I little imagined our correspondence would have produced.

Nevertheless, I was far from being displeated with my conquest, because his person and qualifications, as well as his manner of address, were very much to my liking, and recommended him in a particular manner to my affection. Indeed, he made a greater progress in my heart than I myself suspected; for there was something congenial in our sonls, which from our first meeting I believe had attracted us (unknown to ourselves) under the notions of friendship and regard, and now disclosed itself in the most passionate love.

Vol. III. Q 'I listened

p

17

CC

CC

CI

fu

CO

m fo

ha

he

an

pla

of

of

pa. tro

My ena

bel

no my

refi

rati

me,

ceri

' I listened to his addresses, and we were truly His attachment was the quintessence of tenderness and fincerity, while his generosity knew no Not contented with having paid twelve hundred pounds on my account, in the space of one fortnight, he would have loaded me with prefent after prefent, had I not absolutely refused to accept such expensive marks of his munificence. I was even mortified at those instances of his liberality, which my fituation compelled me to receive; left, being but little acquainted with my disposition, he should suspect me of being interested in my love, and judge my conduct by the malicious reports of common fame which he afterwards owned had at first obtained such credit with him, that he believed our mutual attachment would not be But in this particular he was foon of long duration. undeceived: his heart, though naturally adapted for the melting paffion, had hitherto escaped untouched by all the ladies of Italy and France; and therefore the first impressions were the more deeply fixed. As he was unpractifed in the ways of common gallantry and deceit, the striking simplicity in his character was the more likely to engage the heart of one who knew the perfidy of the world, and despised all the farce and bombast of fashionable profession, which I had always confidered as the phrase of vanity and oftentation, rather than the genuine language of love. Besides, gratitude had a confiderable share in augmenting-my affection, which manifested itself in such a warm, cordial, and artless manner, as increased his esteem, and rivetted his attachment; for he could eafily perceive from the whole tenour of my conduct, that my breaft was an utter stranger to craft and diffimulation: yet I was at first fearful of contracting any engagement with him, because being younger than me, he might be more apt to change, and the world might be malicious enough to suppose I had practifed upon his inexperience; but conscious of my own integrity, I set slander at defiance, trusting to my own behaviour, and his natural probity, for the continuance of his love. Though we did not live together in the fame house, the greatest part of our time was spent in each other's company; we dined and supped at the same table, frequented publick places, went upon parties to the country, and never parted but a few hours in the night, which we passed in the utmost impatience to meet again.

-

.

(-

d

n

C-

of

y

1-

n,

be

on

OI.

by

the

vas

de-

the

the

and

ays

ra-

rra-

af-

cor-

and

eive

reaft

ret I

with

more

cious

ence;

er at

s na-

urai

'In this agreeable manner did the days roll on, when my felicity was interrupted by a fit of jealoufy with which I happened to be feized. I had contracted an acquaintance with a young married lady; who, though her personal attractions were but slender, was, upon the whole, an agreeable, chearful, good-natured companion, with a little dash of the coquette in her composition. This woman being in very indigent circumstances, occasioned by some losses her husband had fustained, no sooner had an opportunity of seeing and converting with my lover, than the formed a defign of making a conquest of him. I should have forgiven her for this scheme, whatever pangs it might have cost me, had I believed it the effect of real passion; but I knew her too well to suppose her heart was susceptible of love, and accordingly refented it. In the execution of her plan, the neglected nothing which the thought capable of engaging his attention. She took all opportunities of fitting near him at table, ogled him in the most palpable manner, directed her whole discourse to him, trod upon his toes; nay, I believe, fqueezed his hand. My blood boiled at her, though my pride, for some time, enabled me to conceal my uneafiness; till at length her behaviour became fo arrogant and grofs, that I could no longer suppress my indignation, and one day told my lover, that I would immediately renounce his correspondence.

He was greatly alarmed at this unexpected declaration; and when he understood the cause of it, assured me, that for the suture he would never exchange one word with her. Satisfied with this mark of his sincerity and regard, I released him from this promise,

, Q2

which

which he could not possibly keep, while she and I lived upon any terms; and we continued to vifit each other as usual, though she still persisted in her endeavours to rival me in his affection, and contracted an intimacy with his companion, who feemed to entertain a passion for her, that she might have the more frequent opportunities of being among us; for the had no objection against favouring the addresses of both. One evening, I remember, we fet out in my coach for the opera; and in the way, this inamorata was so busy with her feet, that I was incenfed at her behaviour, and when we arrived at the place, refused to alight, but setting them down, declared my intention of returning home immediately. She was so much pleased with this intimation, that she could not conceal the joy she felt at the thoughts of converfing with him, uninterrupted by my presence; an opportunity with which I had never favoured her before. This open exultation increased my anger and anxiety. I went home; but, being still tortured with the reflection of having left them together, adjusted myself in the glass, though I was too angry to take notice of my own figure, and without farther delay returned to the opera,

'Having enquired for the box in which they fat, I took possession of one that fronted them, and reconncitering them, without being perceived, had the satisfaction of seeing him removed to as great a distance from her as the place would permit, and his head turned another way. Composed by this examination, I joined them without farther scruple, when my young gentleman expressed great joy at my appearance, and told me he was determined to have left the entertainment, and come in quest of me, had I not returned at that infant.

'In our way homewards, my rival repeated her usual hints, and with her large hoop almost overshadowed my lover from my view: upon which my jealousy and wrath recurred with such violence, that I pulled the string, as a signal for the coachman to stop, with a

216732

wh

ple

by

ho

ki

my

wi

bro ha

the

the

to

lov

fer

the

fet

ret wh

to

to

du

mo

If

ed aft

ag

inc

bo

his

view of getting out, and going home afoot; a step which would have afforded a new spectacle to the people of Paris. But I reflected in a moment upon the folly of such a resolution, and soon recollected myself, by calling my pride to my affistance. I determined, however, that she should act no more scenes of this kind in my presence, and that same night insisted upon my lover's dropping all intercourse and connection with this tormentor! He very chearfully complied with my desire, and was even glad of an occasion to break off his acquaintance with a person about whom I had plagued him so much,

1

n

,

y

r-

to

-9

L

n-

S-

ce

n-I

ng

nd

n-

at

ier

W-

ify

led

1 2

W

Thus was I freed from the persecution of one of those creatures, who, though of little consequence in themselves, are yet the pests of society, and find means to destroy that harmony which reigns between two lovers, by the intrusion of a loose appetite, void of all sensibility and discretion: having no feeling themselves, they cannot sympathize with that of other people, and do mischief out of mere wantonness.

his letters by every post.

'My lover being obliged to go to England, had fettled me in a genteel house in Paris, with a view of returning when his affairs should be adjusted; but when the time of his departure approached, he began to be uneasy at the prospect of separation, and in order to alleviate his anxiety, defired me to accompany him to Calais, where we stayed together three or four days, during which the dread of parting became more and more intense: so that we determined upon my following him into England, by the first opportunity, where I should live altogether incog. that I might be concealed from the enquiries and attempts of my lord. Even after this resolution was fixed, we parted with all the agonies of lovers who despair of ever meeting again; and the wind blowing very high after he had embarked, increased my fears. But by the return of the packet-boat, I was bleffed with the report of his being fafe arrived in England, and had the fatisfaction of perufing

3 · My

fea

m

wa lit

do

cai

div

tha me

pre

riv

im

me

ftai

tog

enh

ren

me

nei

bei fit

feat

tho

my

tim

dut

mer I u

that

and

ficie

-I

bar

Ham

and

4. My admirer being thus detached from me, my thoughts were entirely employed in concerting fome private method of conveying myfelf to him. As I would not trust myself in the common packet, for fear of being discovered, after having revolved divers schemes, I determined to transport myself in one of the Dutch fishing-boats, though I knew the passage would be hazardous; but, in a case of such interesting concern. I overlooked all danger and inconvenience. Before I put this resolution in practice, I was so fortunate as to meet with a small English vessel that arrived at Calais, with a prisoner of war, in which I embarked with my companion and another lady, who lived with me for some time afterwards; and when we came on board, discovered that the ship was no other than a light collier, and that her whole company amounted to no more than three men, Nevertheless, though the fea was fo rough, and the weather fo unpromising, that no other boat would venture to put to fea, we fet fail, and between two ftorms, in about three hours arrived in fafety in Dover.

'From hence my first companion went to her friends, in the stage-coach, while the other lady and I hired an open post-chaise, (though it snowed very hard) and without any accident performed our journey to London, where I met with my lover, who slew to my arms in all the transports of impatient joy; and, doubtless, I deserved his affection, for the hardships, perils, and difficulties, I had undergone to be with him; for I never scrupled to undertake any thing practicable, in order to demonstrate the sincerity of what I professed.

'In consequence of our plan, I assumed a sictitious name, and never appeared in publick, being fully satisfied and happy in the company and conversation of the man I loved; and when he went into the country, contented myself with his correspondence, which he punctually maintained, in a series of letters equally sensible, sincere, and affectionate.

"Upon his return to town for the remainder of the feafon, he devoted the greatest part of his time to our mutual enjoyment; left me with reluctance, when he was called away by indispensible business, and the civility which was due to his acquaintance, and very feldom went to any place of publick entertainment, because I could not accompany and share with him in the diversion: nay, so much did I ingross his attention. that one evening, after he had been teazed into an agreement of meeting fome friends at a play, he went thither precifely at the appointed hour, and as they did not arrive punctually at the very minute, he returned to me immediately, as much rejoiced at his escape as if he had met with some signal deliverance. Nor was his constancy inferior to the ardour of his love: we went once together to a ball in the Hay Market, where, in the midst of a thousand fine women, whose charms were enhanced by the peculiarity of the dreffes they wore, he remained unshaken, unseduced, preserving his attachment for me, in spite of all temptation,

-

-

0 ve

er

17

S,

n-

to

ee

ls,

red

nd

n-

ms

, I

and

rI

, in

d.

ous

ully

tion

nin-

nich

ally

the

on,

'In the fummer he provided me with a house in the neighbournood of his own; but the accommodations being bad, and that country affording no other place fit for my residence, he brought me home to his own feat, and by that step raised an universal clamour, though I faw no company, and led fuch a folitary life, that nothing but excessive love could have supported my spirits: not but that he gave me as much of his time as he could possibly spare from the necessary duties of paying and receiving vilits, together with the avocations of hunting, and other country amusements, which I could not partake. Formerly, indeed, I used to hunt and shoot, but I had left off both; so that I was now reduced to the alternative of reading, and walking by myself; but, Love made up for all deficiencies to me, who think nothing else worth living for! -Had I been bleffed with a partner for life, who could have loved sincerely, and inspired me with a mutual same, I would have asked no more of Fate. Interest and ambition have no share in my composition; love, which

com

fion,

not

take

mv

which

repre

perm

after that me.

I ha

cond

me. ever

entit

judg

joym

I fuf

delib

take,

he fh

lutio

abou

trave

be le

my le

that :

in his

any

henfic

tears

in go

cafior

affect

taken

6 1

which is pleasure, or pleasure, which is love, makes up the whole. A heart so disposed cannot be devoid of other good qualities; it must be subject to the impressions of humanity and benewolence, and enemy to nothing but itself. This you will give me leave to affirm, in justice to myself; as I have frankly owned my failings and misconduct.

Towards the end of fummer my heart was a little alarmed by a report that prevailed, of my lover's being actually engaged in a treaty of marriage: however, I gave little credit to this rumour, till I was obliged to go to town about business, and there I heard the same information confidently affirmed. Though I still confidered it as a vague surmise, I wrote to him an account of what I had heard; and in his answer, which is still in my possession, he assured me with repeated vows and protestations, that the report was altogether salse. Satisfied with this declaration, I returned to his house; and though the tale was incessantly thundered in my ears, still believed it void of all foundation, till my suspicion was awaked by a very inconsiderable circumstance.

'One day, on his return from hunting, I perceived he had a very fine pair of Dresden russles on his shirt, which I could not suppose he would wear at such a ruftick exercife: and therefore my fears immediately took the alarm. When I questioned him about this particular of his drefs, his colour changed; and though he attempted to elude my suspicion, by imputing it to a mistake of his servant, I could not rest satisfied with this account of the matter, but enquired into the truth with fuch eagerness and penetration, that he could not deny he had been to make a vifit. By degrees, I even extorted from him a confession, that he had engaged himself farther than he ought to have proceeded, without making me acquainted with his defign, though he endeavoured to excuse his conduct, and pacify my difpleafure, by faying that the affair would not be brought to bear for a great while, and perhaps might never

tions,

come to a determination; but he was in great confu-fion, indeed hardly knew what he faid.

'I would have quitted his house that moment, had not he, before-hand, obtained a promise that I would take no rash resolution of that kind, and put it out of my power to procure any method of conveyance by which I could make my retreat. I gave no vent to reproaches, and only upbraided him with his having permitted me to return in ignorance to the country, after I was once fairly gone; upon which he fwore, that he could not bear the thoughts of parting with me. This declaration was a mystery at that time, but I have been fince fo fully fatisfied of his reasons for his conduct, that I heartily acquit him of all injustice to And, indeed, it is my fincere opinion, that if ever young man deserved to be happy, he is certainly entitled to that privilege; and if I may be allowed to judge, has an heart susceptible of the most refined enjoyment.

The violence of the grief and consternation which I suffered from this stroke, having a little subsided, I deliberated with myself about the measures I should take, and determined to leave his house some day when he should be abroad. I was encouraged in this resolution by the advice of our Scotch friend, who came about this time from London, on a visit to his fellow-traveller: we thought such an abrupt departure would be less shocking than to stay and take a formal leave of my lover, whose heart was of such a delicate frame, that after I told him I should one day withdraw myself in his absence, he never came home from the chace, or any other avocation, without trembling with appre-henfion that I had escaped.

f

1

d

.

d

3,

n

ed

t,

a

ly

is

gh

to

th

ith

not

ren

red

th-

he

lif-

ght

ver

18

'After he had been some time accustomed to these fears by my previous intimation, I at length decamped in good earnest, though my heart ached upon the occasion, because I lest him loving and beloved; for his affection was evident, notwithstanding the step he had taken, by the advice and importunity of all his relations, who laid a difagreeable restraint upon his inclinations, while they confulted his interest in every other particular.

While I halted in the next great town, until I could be supplied with fresh horses, I was visited by a gentleman who had been formerly intimate with my lover; but a breach had happened in their friendship, and he now came to complain of the treatment he had received. Perceiving that I was not in a humour to listen to his story, he shifted the conversation to my own, and observed, that I had been extremely ill-used. I told him that I was of a different opinion: that it was not only just, but expedient, that a young man of Mr. ——'s fortune should think of making some alliance, to strengthen and support the interest of his family; and that I had nothing to accuse him of but his letting me remain so long in ignorance of his intention. He then gave me to understand, that I was fill ignorant of a great part of the ill usage I had received; affirming, that while I lived in his house, he had amused himself with all the common women in that town, to some of whom this gentleman had perfonally introduced him.

At first, I could not believe this imputation; but he supported his affertions with so many convincing circumstances, that I could no longer doubt the truth of them; and I felt fo much refentment, that my love vanished immediately into air. Instead of proceeding in my journey to London, I went back a confiderable way, and fent a meffage, defiring to fee him in a little house, about mid-way between his own habitation and the town from whence I came. He obeyed my fummons, and appeared at the place appointed, where I reproached him with great bitterness. He pleaded guilty to the charge, fo far as acknowledging that he had corresponded with other women lately, in order to get the better of his affection for me, but the experiment had failed, and he found that he should be for ever miferable.

ficie the whi we l afte was and lefs, Ray trea niy I fe with our Lei fom that any upo and pose was

prof

ably feen crea mac fort mo ing who as ] was upo infi ma ncli-

ther

til I

by_a

my hip,

had

ir to

mv

ufed.

at it

an of

fome

f his

f but

s in-

was

d re-

e, he

en in

per.

but

ncing

truth

love

eding

rable

little

n and

fum-

I re-

ruilty

e had

o get

ment

r midid

I did not look upon this candid confession as a fufficient atonement for his past dissimulation; and, in the sharpness of my revenge, demanded a settlement, which he peremptorily refused, so that, for the present, we held each other in the utmost contempt. Indeed I afterwards despised myself for my condescension, which was owing to the advice of my companion, supported and inflamed by the spirit of resentment. Nevertheless, he begged that I would return to his house, or hay all night where I was; but I was deaf to his intreaties, and after a great deal of ironical civility on my fide, I took my leave, and went away; yet, before I fet out, I looked back, and faw him on horfeback, with fuch an air of simplicity and truth, as called up a profound figh, notwithstanding all that had passed in our conversation.

Upon my arrival in London, I took lodgings in Leicester Fields, and answered a letter which I had some months before received from my lord, telling him that I would go home to him, without stipulating for any terms, to try what effect my confidence would have upon his generofity. He readily embraced the offer, and took a house in St. James's Street, where I proposed to comply with his humour in every thing that was confiftent with my own peace and tranquillity.

'Meanwhile, my lover passed his time very disagreeably in the country, with his friend, of whom (it feems) he had conceived fome jealoufy, which was increafed by a letter I wrote to that gentleman, till he was made acquainted with the contents, which he read over forty times: and then his paffion breaking out with more violence than ever, he not only expressed his feeling, in an epiftle which I immediately received, but when he came to town, fuffered fuch agonies of despair as I had never feen before, except in Lord B---. was then in my power to have taken ample revenge upon him, as well as upon my infolent rival, who had infifted upon my leaving his house, in a very abrupt manner, though he absolutely refused to gratify her malice;

malice: for he was now disposed to do any thing for my satisfaction: but I knew his worth, and had too much regard for his reputation to advise him to act inconsistent with his honour.

About this time, many tender meetings and forrowful partings happened between us, till the marriage knot was tied, when he fent me a bank-note for a thoufand pounds, by way of specimen (as he called it) of his friendship, and of what he would do for me, should I ever want his assistance. This mark of his generosity I received in a most tender billet, which I shall never part with, together with his picture set in diamonds.

'I now employed my thoughts in keeping measures with my lord; we lay in the same apartment, and for the first four or five months I neither dined or supped abroad above twice, and then he knew where I was, and approved of my company. But all this complacency and circumspection had no effect upon his temper, which remained as capricious and distaissied as ever. Nay, to such a provoking degree did this unhappy humour prevail, that one day, in the presence of his lawyer, he harangued upon my misconduct since our last re-union, and very freely affirmed, that every step I had taken was diametrically opposite to his will.

Conscious of the pains I had been at to please him. I was so incensed at these unjust invectives, that starting up, I told him he was a little dirty fellow; and would have left the house immediately, had not his lawyer and others, who were in the next room, interposed, and by dint of argument and importunity diverted me from my purpose. By the bye, I have been informed by a person of rank, that my lord discovered exactly the same disposition in his father's life-time, and only changes the subject of his complaint from the word father to that of wife. Indeed, he takes all opportunities of plaguing my dear parent, as he has just sagacity enough to know, that this is the most effectual way he can take to diffress me,

· After

ma

fitt

gr

the

per fpe

vai

feli

and

and

cha

he

ma

ing

oft

cui

of

net

fpc

the

thu

the

nit

hor

the

fee

tha

pec

we

tion

ast

to

and

inte

Ke

ô

r-

u-

of

ld

0-

le-

ia-

res

for

red

as,

la-

m-

25

un-

e of

nce

ery

rill.

im.

art-

and

his

ter-

di-

neen-

ered

ime,

the the

all

has

t ef-

fter

VOL. III.

alty

After repeated trials, I have given up all hopes of making him happy, or of finding myself easy in my fituation; and live with him at prefent to avoid a greater inconvenience. Not that his ill-nature is all the grievance of which I complain: exclusive of the personal disgust I entertain for him, his folly is of that fpecies which disobliges rather than diverts, and his vanity and affectation altogether intolerable; for he actually believes himself, or at least would impose himfelf upon mankind, as a pattern in gallantry and tafte; and, in point of bufiness, a person of infinite sagacity and penetration; but the most ridiculous part of his character is his pretended talent for politicks, in which he fo deeply concerns himself, that he has dismissed many a good fervant because he suspected him of having wrong connections; a theme upon which he has often quarrelled with me, even almost to parting, acculing me with holding correspondence with the Earls of B and C, and Mr. H. V, though I never had the least acquaintance with any of these gentlemen, except the Earl of C-, to whom I have not ipoken for these ten years past.

'In short, I have often been at a loss to know, whether he was more mad or malicious in those fits of enthusiasm, wherein he seemed transported with zeal for the commonwealth, and tormented me with his admonitions, out of all temper and patience. At length, however, I contrived an expedient which freed me from these troublesome expostulations, and silenced him effectually on the score of politicks. This was no other than an open avowal of being connected with all those people whom I have named. Indeed, I knew him too well to believe there was any thing folid in his intention or professions, even when he carried himself so far as to demand a private audience with the king, in order to communicate a scheme for suppressing the rebellion; and that being denied, folicited the Duke of D-'s interest for permission to raise and head a regiment of Kentish smugglers: nay, to such a pitch did his leyalty foar, that he purchased a firelock of particular mechanism, calculated for the safety of the bearer, in case he had been placed centinel at his majesty's door; and kept his horses ready caparisoned, with a view of attending his sovereign to the field. Notwithstanding all these pompous preparations, had he been put to the proof, he would have infallibly crept out of his engagement, through some sneaking evasion, his imagination being very fertile in such saving pretences. Yet he will talk sometimes so fervently, and even sensibly, on the subject, that a stranger would mistake him for a man of understanding, and determined zeal for the good of his country.

Since my last return to his house, that act of parliament passed, by which he was enabled to pay his debts, and among the rest, a thousand pounds of my contracting, the only burden of that kind I ever intailed upon him, exclusive of my pin-money, which was never regularly paid; nor would he have been fubject to this, had he not, by his perfecution and purfuit, exposed me to an extraordinary expence. I have also had it in my power to reward some of my faithful Abigails; in particular, to relieve from extreme diftress that maid to whom (as I have already observed) Lord B- granted an annuity, which the had fold: fo that the was reduced to the most abject poverty, and I found her in a dismal hole, with two infants perishing for want; a spectacle which drew tears from my eyes, and indeed could not but make deep impression upon a heart like mine, which the mifery of my fellow creatures never failed to melt.

'Nor did I upon this occasion forget the attachment and fidelity of my other woman Mrs. S—, who hearing I was robbed in my passage through Flanders, had generously relinquished the allowance I had settled upon her at parting. The exercise of such acts of humanity and benevolence, and the pleasure of seeing my dear and tender parent often, in some measure alleviate the chagrin to which I am subject, from the disagree-

able

a

a

0 fi

te

iff

er

fu

m

til

en

Pe

of

the

CO

to

ger

r

n

f

e

n

e

n

a

d

is

y

1-

h

n

r-

ve

1 ſ-

1)

1:

nd

ng

S,

a a-

nt

r-

ad

p-

u-

ny

ite

ee-

able disposition of my lord, who, consistent with his former inconfiftency, upon our last reconciliation chearfully agreed to a propofal I made of having concerts in the house, and even approved of the scheme with marks of particular fatisfaction: but before one half of the winter was expired, he found means to banish all the company, beginning with Lord R---; who as he walked up stairs one evening, was stopped by a footman, who plainly told him he had orders to fay to him in particular, that his lordship was not at home; yet, the very next day, perceiving that nobleman and me walking together in the Park, he joined us with an air of alacrity, as if no fuch thing had happened; and even behaved to Lord R- with the most fawning complaifance. His deportment was equally abfurd and impertinent to the rest of his friends, who forfook us gradually, being tired of maintaining any friendly communication with fuch a difagreeable composition of ignorance and arrogance. For my own part, I look upon him as utterly incorrigible; and as fate hath fubjected me to his power, endeavour to make the bitter draught go down, by detaching myself as much as possible, from the supposition that there is any such exiftence upon earth. Indeed, if I had not fatal experience of the contrary, I should be apt to believe that fuch a character is not to be found among the fons of men; because his conduct is altogether unaccountable by the known rules and maxims of life, and falls entirely under the poet's observation, when he fays-

"Tis true, no meaning puzzles more than wit,"

Her ladyship having thus concluded her story, to the entertainment of the company, and the admiration of Peregrine, who expressed his assonishment at the variety of adventures she had undergone, which was such as he thought sufficient to destroy the most hardy and robust constitution, and therefore infinitely more than enough to overwhelm one of her delicate frame; one of the gentlemen present roundly taxed her with want of can-

be

m

tr

01

tr

pl

21

r

b

li

77

(

r

dour, in suppressing some circumstances of her life, which he thought essential in the consideration of her character.

She reddened at this peremptory charge, which had an evident effect upon the countenances of the whole audience, when the accuser proceeded to explain his imputation, by observing, that, in the course of her narration, she had omitted to mention a thousand acts of uncommon charity, of which he himself knew her to be guilty; and that she had concealed a great many advantageous proposals of marriage, which she might have accepted before the was engaged.

The company were agreeably undeceived by this explanation; which her ladyship acknowledged in very polite terms, as a compliment equally genteel and unexpected: and our hero, after having testified the sense he had of her complaifance and condescension, in regaling him with a mark of her confidence and efteem, took his leave, and went home in a state of confusion and perplexity; for, from the circumstances of the tale he had heard, he plainly perceived that her ladyship's heart was too delicate to receive such incense, as he, in the capacity of an admirer, could at present pay; because, though he had in some measure abridged the empire of Emilia in his own breaft, it was not in his power to restrain it so effectually, but that it would interfere with any other fovereign whom his thoughts fhould adopt; and, unless Lady - could engross his whole love, time, and attention, he forefaw that it would be impossible for him to support the passion which he might have the good fortune to inspire. He was, moreover, deterred from declaring his love, by the fate of her former admirers, who seemed to have been wound up to a degree of enthusiasm, that looked more like the effect of enchantment, than the inspiration of human attractions; an extafy of passion which he durst not venture to undergo. He therefore refolved to combat with the impressions he had already received, and, if possible, cultivate her friendship without foliciting her her affection: but, before he could fix upon this determination; he defired to know the footing on which he flood in her opinion; and by the intelligence of Crabtree, obtained in the usual manner, understood that her fentiments of him were very favourable, though without the least tincture of love. He would have been transported with joy, had her thoughts of him been of a more tender texture; though his reason was better pleased with the information he received: in consequence of which he mustered up the ideas of his first passion, and set them in opposition to those of this new and dangerous attachment; by which means he kept the balance in equilibrio, and his bosom tolerably quiet.

ť

t

e

n

S

S

n

e

e

n

e

lt

He perfuades Cadwallader to affume the Character of a Magician, in which he acquires a great Share of Reputation, by his Responses to three Females of Distinction, who severally consult the Researches of his Art.

HIS heart being thus, as it were, suspended between two objects, that lessend the force of each other's attraction, he took this opportunity of enjoying some respite, and for the present detached his sentiments from both; resolving to indulge himself in the exercise of that practical satire, which was so agreeable and peculiar to his disposition. In this laudable determination he was consumed by the repeated suggestions of his friend Cadwallader, who taxed him with letting his talents rust in indolence, and stimulated his natural vivacity, with a succession of fresh discoveries in the world of scandal.

'Peregrine was now feized with a strange whim, and when he communicated the conceit to Cadwallader, it in a moment acquired his approbation. This notion he imparted in a proposal, to subject the town to their ridicule, by giving responses in the character of a professed conjuror, to be personated by the old misanthrope, whose aspect was extremely well calculated for the purpose. The plan was immediately adjusted in all its parts; an apartment hired in a house accommo-

R 3

he

m

fe

ot

tr

a

q

21

b

V

(

dour, in suppressing some circumstances of her life, which he thought essential in the consideration of her character.

She reddened at this peremptory charge, which had an evident effect upon the countenances of the whole audience, when the accuser proceeded to explain his imputation, by observing, that, in the course of her narration, she had omitted to mention a thousand acts of uncommon charity, of which he himself knew her to be guilty; and that she had concealed a great many advantageous proposals of marriage, which she might have accepted before the was engaged.

The company were agreeably undeceived by this explanation; which her ladyship acknowledged in very polite terms, as a compliment equally genteel and unexpected: and our hero, after having testified the sense he had of her complaifance and condescension, in regaling him with a mark of her confidence and efteem, took his leave, and went home in a state of confusion and perplexity; for, from the circumstances of the tale he had heard, he plainly perceived that her ladyship's heart was too delicate to receive fuch incense, as he, in the capacity of an admirer, could at prefent pay; because, though he had in some measure abridged the empire of Emilia in his own breaft, it was not in his power to restrain it so effectually, but that it would interfere with any other fovereign whom his thoughts should adopt; and, unless Lady - could engrois his whole love, time, and attention, he forefaw that it would be impossible for him to support the passion which he might have the good fortune to inspire. He was, moreover, deterred from declaring his love, by the fate of her former admirers, who feemed to have been wound up to a degree of enthusiasm, that looked more like the effect of enchantment, than the inspiration of human attractions; an extafy of passion which he durst not venture to undergo. He therefore refolved to combat with the impressions he had already received, and, if possible, cultivate her friendship without soliciting her affection: but, before he could fix upon this determination; he defired to know the footing on which he flood in her opinion; and by the intelligence of Crabtree, obtained in the ufual manner, underflood that her fentiments of him were very favourable, though without the leaft tincture of love. He would have been transported with joy, had her thoughts of him been of a more tender texture; though his reason was better pleased with the information he received: in consequence of which he mustered up the ideas of his first passion, and set them in opposition to those of this new and dangerous attachment; by which means he kept the balance in equilibrio, and his bosom tolerably quiet.

CHAP. X.

đ

e

f

t

e

,

n

S

-

e

.

S

it

n

e

n

·e

He persuades Cadwallader to assume the Character of a Magician, in which he acquires a great Share of Reputation, by his Responses to three Females of Distinction, who severally consult the Researches of his Art.

HIS heart being thus, as it were, suspended between two objects, that lessend the force of each other's attraction, he took this opportunity of enjoying some respite, and for the present detached his sentiments from both; resolving to include himself in the exercise of that practical satire, which was so agreeable and peculiar to his disposition. In this laudable determination he was confirmed by the repeated suggestions of his friend Cadwallader, who taxed him with letting his talents rust in indolence, and stimulated his natural vivacity, with a succession of fresh discoveries in the world of scandal.

'Peregrine was now seized with a strange whim, and when he communicated the conceit to Cadwallader, it in a moment acquired his approbation. This notion he imparted in a proposal, to subject the town to their ridicule, by giving responses in the character of a professed conjuror, to be personated by the old misantimope, whose aspect was extremely well calculated for the purpose. The plan was immediately adjusted in all its parts; an apartment hired in a house accommo-

R 3

dated with a publick stair, so that people might have free ingress and egress, without being exposed to observation; and this tenement being surnished with the apparatus of a magician, such as globes, telescopes, a magic-lanthorn, a skeleton, a dried monkey, together with the skins of an alligator, otter, and snake, the conjurer himself took possession of his castle, after having distributed printed advertisements, containing the particulars of his undertaking.

'These bills soon operated according to the wish of the projectors. As the price of the oracle was fixed at half a guinea, the publick naturally concluded that the author was no common fortune-teller; and the very next day, Peregrine found fome ladies of his quality acquaintance, infected with the defire of making an experiment upon the skill of this new conjuror, who pretended to be just arrived from the Mogul's empire, where he had learned the art from a Brachman philosopher. Our young gentleman affected to talk of the pretentions of this fage with ridicule and contempt, and with feeming reluctance undertook to attend them to his apartment, observing that it would be a very easy matter to detect the fellow's ignorance, and no more than common justice to chastise him for his presumption. Though he could eafily perceive a great fund of credulity in the company, they affected to espouse his opinion, and under the notion of a frolick, agreed, that one particular lady should endeavour to bassle his art, by appearing before him in the drefs of her woman, who should at the same time personate her mistress, and be treated as fuch by our adventurer, who promifed to fquire them to the place. These measures being concerted, and the appointment fixed for the next audienceday, Peregrine furnished his friend with the necessary information; and when the hour of affignation arrived, conducted his charge to this oraculous feer.

They were admitted by our hero's valet de chambre, whose visage being naturally meagre and swarthy, was adorned with artificial whiskers; so that he became the

Perfian

re he

a er he er he of ed at ry co- er de er he er he

COOKE'S POCKET EDITION OF SELECT NOVELS.

Persian dress which he wore, and seemed a very proper master of the ceremonies to an oriental necromancer. Having crossed his arms upon his breast, with an inclination of the head, he stalked in solemn silence before them into the penetralia of the temple, where they found the conjuror sitting at a table, provided with penink, and paper, divers books, and mathematical instruments, and a long white wand lying across the whole. He was habited in a black gown and sur-cap: his countenance, over and above a double proportion of philosophick gravity, which he had assumed for the occasion, was improved by a thick beard, white as snow, that reached to his middle; upon each shoulder sat a prodigious large black cat, which had been tutored for the purpose.

Such a figure, which would have fartled Peregrine himself, had not he been concerned in the mystery, could not fail to make an impression upon those whom he accompanied. The fictitious chambermaid, in spite of all her natural pertness and vivacity, changed colour when the entered the room, while the pretended lady, whose intellects were not quite so enlightened, began to tremble in every joint, and ejaculate petitions to Heaven for her fafety. Their conductor advancing to the table, prefented his offering, and pointing to the maid, told him that lady defired to know what would be her deftiny in point of marriage. The philosopher, without lifting up his eyes to view the person in whose behalf he was confuited, turned his ear to one of the fable familiars that purred upon his shoulder, and taking up the pen, wrote upon a detached flip of paper these words, which Peregrine, at the defire of the ladies, repeated aloud. 'Her deftiny will, in a great measure, depend upon what happened to her about nine o'clock in the morning, on the third day of last December.'

This fentence was no fooner pronounced, than the counterfeit lady fcreamed, and ran out into the anti-chamber, exclaiming—' Christ have mercy upon us!

Sure he is the devil incarnate! Her mistres, who followed her with great consternation, insisted upon knowing the transaction to which the response alluded; and Mrs. Abigail, after some recollection, gave her to understand that she had an admirer, who, on that very hour and day mentioned by the cunning man, had addressed himself to her in a serious proposal of marriage. This explanation, however, was more ingenious than candid; for the admirer was no other than the identical Mr. Pickle himself, who was a mere dragon among the chambermaids, and in his previous information communicated to his associate, had given an account of this assignation, with which he had been favoured by the damfel in question.

Our hero feeing his company very much affected with this circumstance of the wizard's art, which had almost frighted both mistress and maid into hysterick fits, pretended to laugh them out of their fears, by obferving, that there was nothing extraordinary in this instance of his knowledge, which might have been acquired by some of those secret emissaries whom such impostors are obliged to employ for intelligence, or imparted by the lover himself, who had perhaps come to confult him about the fuccess of his a nour. Encouraged by this observation, or rather prompted by an infatiable curiofity, which was proof against all forts of apprehension, the disguised lady returned to the magician's own apartment, and affuming the air of a pert chambermaid-' Mr. Conjuror,' faid she, 'now you have fatisfied my mistress, will you be so good as to tell me, if ever I shall be married?' The fage, without the least hesitation, favoured her with an answer in the following words. 'You cannot be married before you are a widow; and whether or not that will ever be the case, is a question which my art cannot resolve, because my foreknowledge exceeds not the term of thirty years.'

This reply, which at once cut her off from the pleafing prospect of seeing herself independent in the enjoyment

m

af

W

te

fta

tic

W

de

pe

th

in

pr

m

th

th

ac

th

in

tir

cu

kr

pu

W

pa

qu w

01

na

m

th

th

fre

ment of youth and fortune, in a moment clouded her aspect; all her good-humour was overcast, and she went away, without farther enquiry, muttering, in the rancour of her chagrin, that he was a filly impertinent fellow, and a mere quack in his profession. Notwithstanding the prejudice of this resentment, her conviction soon recurred; and when the report of his answers was made to those confederates by whom she had been deputed to make trial of his skill, they were universally persuaded that his art was altogether supernatural, though each affected to treat it with contempt, resolving, in her own breast, to have recourse to him in private.

In the mean time, the maid, though laid under the most peremptory injunctions of secress, was so full of the circumstance which related to her own conduct, that she extolled his prescience, in whispers to all her acquaintance, assuring them, that he had told her all the particulars of her life; so that his same was almost instantaneously conveyed through a thousand different channels, to all parts of the town; and the very next time he assumed the chair, his doors were besieged by curious people of all sects and denominations.

Being an old practitioner in this art, Cadwallader knew it would be impossible for him to support his reputation in the promiscuous exercise of fortune-telling, because every person that should come to consult him would expect a sample of his skill, relating to things past; and it could not be supposed that he was acquainted with the private concerns of every individual who might apply to him for that purpose: he therefore ordered his minister, whom he distinguished by the name of Hadgi Rourk, to signify to all those who demanded entrance, that his price was half a guinea; and that all such as were not disposed to gratify him with that consideration, would do well to leave the passage free for the rest.

This declaration succeeded to his wish; for this congregation consisted chiefly of footnen, chambermaids, apprentices, apprentices, and the lower class of tradefinen, who could not afford to purchase prescience at such a price; so that, after fruitless offers of shillings and half crowns, they dropped off one by one, and left the field open for

ful

div

lig

un

OC

fin

her

her

tai

ent

Pi

hir

Ca

im

her

fiv

the

tal

his

her

her

an

ap

aff

inc

for

tia

pro

no

pla

pe

an

of

an

Wi

cultomers of an higher rank.

The first person of this species who appeared was dreffed like the wife of a substantial tradesman; but this disguise could not screen her from the penetration of the conjuror; who at first fight knew her to be one of the ladies of whose coming he had been apprized by Peregrine, on the supposition that their curiosity was rather inflamed than allayed by the intelligence they had received from his first client. This lady approached the philosopher with that intrepidity of countenance so conspicuous in matrons of her dignified sphere, and in a foit voice, alked with a simper, of what complexion her next child would be? The necromancer, who was perfectly well acquainted with her private history, forthwith delivered his response in the following question, written in the usual form-' How long has Pompey the black been difiniffed from your ladyfhip's fervice?'

Endued as she was with a great share of that fortitude which is distinguished by the appellation of effrontery, her face exhibited fome figns of fhame and confusion at the receipt of this oracular interrogation, by which flie was convinced of his extraordinary intelligence; and accosting him in a very ferious tone- Doctor, faid she, 'I perceive you are a person of great abilities in the art you profess; and therefore, without pretending to diffemble, I will own you have touched the true ftring of my apprehensions. I am persuaded I need not be more particular in my enquiries. Here is a purse of money; take it, and deliver me from a most alarming and uneafy fuspense.' So faying, she deposited her offering upon the table, and waited for his answer with a face of fearful expectation, while he was employed in writing this fentence for her perufal- 'Though I fee into the womb of time, the prospect is not perfectly distinct; the feeds of future events lie mingled and confused:

fused: so that I am under the necessity of assisting my divination in some cases, by analogy and human intelligence; and cannot possibly satisfy your present doubts, unless you will condescend to make me pravy to all those occurrences which you think might have interfered with the cause of your apprehension.'

The lady having read the declaration, affected a fmall emotion of shyness and repugnance, and seating herfelf upon a fettee, after having cautiously informed herfelf of the privacy of the apartment, gave fuch a detail of the fuccession of her lovers, as amazed while it entertained the necromancer, as well as his friend Pickle, who from a closet, in which he had concealed himself, over-heard every syllable of her contession. Cadwallader liftened to her ftory with a look of infinite importance and fagacity; and after a flort paule told her, that he would not pretend to give a categorical anfwer, until he should have deliberated maturely upon the various circumstances of the affair; but if she would take the trouble of honouring him with another vifit on his next publick day, he hoped he should be able to give her full fatisfaction. Confcious of the importance of her doubts, the could not help commending his caution, and took her leave, with a promise of returning at the appointed time: then the conjuror being joined by his affociate, they gave a loofe to their mirth, which having indulged, they began to concert measures for inflicting fome difgraceful punishment on the shameless and infatiate termagant who had so impudently avowed her own proftitution.

They were interrupted, however, in their conference, by the arrival of a new guest, who being announced by Hadgi, our hero retreated to his lurking place, and Cadwallader resumed his mysterious appearance. This new client, though she hid her face in a mask, could not conceal herself from the knowledge of the conjuror, who by her voice recognized her to be an unmarried lady of his own acquaintance. She had, within a small compass of time, made herself remarkable for two adventures, which had not at all fucceed ed to her expectation: being very much addicted to play. the had, at a certain rout, indulged that passion to such excess, as not only got the better of her justice, but alfo of her circumspection; fo that she was unfortunately detected in her endeavours to appropriate to herfelf what was not lawfully her due. This finall flip was attended with another indifcretion, which had likewife an unlucky effect upon her reputation. She had been favoured with the addresses of one of those hopeful heirs, who fwarm and fwagger about town under the denomination of Bucks; and in the confidence of his honour confented to be one of a partie that made an excursion as far as Windfor, thinking herfelf fecured from fcandal by the company of another young lady, who had also condescended to trust her person to the protection of her admirer. The two gallants, in the course of this expedition, were faid to use the most perfidious means to intoxicate the passions of their mistresses, by mixing drugs with their wife, which inflamed their conflitutions to fuch a degree, that they fell an easy facrifice to the appetites of their conductors, who, upon their return to town, were fo base and inhuman as to boast among their companions of the exploit they had at-Thus the flory was circulated, with a thouchieved. fand additional circumstances, to the prejudice of the fufferers, one of whom had thought proper to withdraw into the country, until the scandal raised at her expence should subfide; while the other, who was not so easily put out of countenance, refolved to out-face the report, as a treacherous afpersion, invented by her lover as an excuse for his own inconstancy; and actually appeared in publick, as usual, till she found herself neglected by the greatest part of her acquaintance.

In consequence of this disgrace, which she knew not whether to impute to the card affair, or to the last faux pas she had committed, she now came to consult the conjuror, and signified her errand, by asking whether the cause of her present disquiet was of the town or the country.

CO

WC

pla

Wi

vii

ad wh

nit th:

lov

the

der

cal

no

fer fu;

nii

lie

qui

Rut

ed

to :

fon

all:

country. Cadwallader at once perceiving her allusion, answered her question in these terms—' This honest world will forgive a young gamester for indiscretion at play, but a favour granted to a babbling coxcomb is an unpardonable offence.' This response she received with equal astonishment and chagrin: and, fully convinced of the necromancer's omniscience, implored his advice touching the retrieval of her reputation: upon which he countelled her to wed with the first opportunity. She seemed so well pleased with his admonition, that she gratisted him with a double see, and dropping a low currsey, retired.

Our undertakers now thought it high time to filence the oracle for the day; and Hadgi was accordingly ordered to exclude all comers, while Peregrine and his friend reuewed the deliberations which had been interrupted, and fettled a plan of operations for the next occasion; meanwhile it was refolved, that Hadgi should not only exe cife his own talents, but also employ inferior agents, in procuring general intelligence for the support of their schemes; that the expence of this ministry should be defrayed from the profits of their professions, and the remainder be distributed to poor families in distress.

CHAP. XI.

Peregrine and his Friend Cadwallader proceed in the exercife of the Myslery of Fortune-Telling, in the Course of which they atchieve various Adventures.

THESE preliminaries being adjusted, our hero forthwith repaired to a card assembly, which was frequented by some of the most notable gossips in town, and having-artfully turned the conversation upon the subject of the fortune-teller, whose talents he pretended to ridicule, incensed their itch of knowing secrets to such a degree of impatience, that their curiosity became slagrant, and he took it for granted, that all or some of them would visit Albumazar on his very first visiting-day. While Peregrine was thus engaged, this afficiate made his appearance in another convocation Vol. III.

of tashionable people, where he soon had the pleasure of hearing the conjurer brought upon the carpet by a elderly gentlewoman, remarkable for her inquilitive disposition, who addressing herself to Cadwallader, asked, by the help of the finger-alphabet, if he knew any thing of the magician that made fuch a noise in town. The mifanthrope answered as usual, in a furly tone- By your question, you must either take me for a pimp or an idiot. What, in the name of nonfense, should I know of fuch a raical, unless I were to court his acquaintance with a view to feast my own spleen. in feeing him fool the whole nation out of their money! Though, I suppose, his chief profits arise from his practice, in quality of pander. All fortune-tellers are bawds, and for that reason are so much followed by people of fashion. This fellow, I warrant, has got fundry convenient apartments for the benefit of procreation; for it is not to be supposed that those who vifit him on the pretence of confulting his supernatural art, can be fuch fools, fuch drivellers, as to believe that he can actually prognosticate future events.'

The company, according to his expectation, imputed his remarks to the rancour of his disposition, which could not bear to think that any perfon upon earth was wifer than himfelf; and his ears were regaled with a thousand instances of the conjuror's wonderful prescience, for which he was altogether indebted to fiction. Some of these specimens being communicated to him by way of appear to his opinion- 'They are,' faid he, ' mere phantoms of ignorance and credulity, fwelled up in the repetition, like those unsubstantial bubbles which the boys blow up in foap-fuds with a tobacco-pipe. And this will ever be the case in the propagation of all extraordinary intelligence: the imagination naturally magnifies every object that falls under it's cognizance, especially those that concern the passions of fear and admiration; and when the occurrence comes to be rehearfed, the vanity of the relater exaggerates every circumfiance, in order to enhance the importance of the commu-

con

lv ·

gre

pre

ting

wh

me

gen

me

one

har

abi

pol

thi

had

not

VO

tie

the

all

ch

hi

is

at

lor

ch

Fil

th

DI.

W

VC

2

Ve

W

h

communication. Thus an incident which is but barely uncommon, often gains such accession in it's progress through the fancies and mouths of those who reprefent it, that the original fact cannot possibly be diftinguished. This observation might be proved and illustrated by a thousand undeniable examples, out of which I shall only select one instance, for the entertainment and edification of the company. A very honest gentleman, remarkable for the gravity of his deportment, was one day in a certain coffee-house accosted by one of his particular friends; who, taking him by the hand, expressed uncommon satisfaction in seeing him abroad, and in good health, after the dangerous and portentous malady he had undergone. Surprized at this falutation, the gentleman replied, it was true he had been a little out of order over night, but there was nothing at all extraordinary in his indifposition .- " Jefu, not extraordinary!" cried the other, " when you vomited three black crows!" This strange exclamation the grave gentleman at first mistook for raillery, though his friend was no joker; but perceiving in him all the marks of fincerity and aftonishment, he suddenly changed his opinion, and after a short reverie, taking him afide, expressed himself in these words: "Sir, it is not unknown to you that I am at present engaged in a treaty of marriage, which would have been fettled long ago, had it not been retarded by the repeated machinations of a certain person who professed himself my rival. Now I am fully perfuaded that this affair of the three crows is a flory of his invention, calculated to prejudice me in the opinion of the lady, who, to be fure, would not chuse to marry a man who has a rookery in · his bowels; and therefore I must insist upon knowing your author of this scandalous report, that I may be able to vindicate my character from the malicious afpersion." His friend, who thought the demand was very reasonable, told him without hesitation, that he was made acquainted with the circumstance of his difsemper by Mr. Such-a-one, their common acquaintance: upon which the person who conceived himself injured, went immediately in quest of his supposed defamer, and having found him-" Pray, Sir," faid he, with a peremptory tone, "who told you that I vomited three black crows?"-" Three!" answered the gentleman, " I mentioned two only."-" Zounds. Sir!" cried the other, incenfed at his indifference, " you will find the two too many, if you refuse to discover the villainous fource of fuch calumny." The gentleman, furprized at his heat, faid he was forry to find he had been the accidental instrument of giving him offence, but translated the blame (if any there was) from himself to a third person, to whose information he owed his knowledge of the report. The plaintiff, according to the direction he received, repaired to the house of the accused; and his indignation being inflamed at finding the flory had already circulated among his acquaintance, he told him, with evident marks of difpleafure, that he was come to pluck the fam: brace of crows which he faid he had difgorged. The defendant feeing him very much irritated, positively denied that he had mentioned a brace: " One, indeed," faid he, "I own I took notice of, upon the authority of your own physician, who gave me an account of it this morning."-" By the Lord!" cried the fufferer in a rage, which he could no longer contain, "that rafcal has been suborned by my rival to slander my character in this manner; but I'll be revenged, if there be either law or equity in England!" He had scarce pronounced these words, when the doctor happened to enter the room: when his exasperated patient lifting up his cane -" Sirrah," faid he, "if I live, I'll make that black crow the blackest circumstance of thy whole life and conversation!" The physician, confounded at this addrefs, affured him that he was utterly ignorant of his meaning: and when the other gentleman explained it, absolutely denied the charge, affirming he had said no more than that he had vomited a quantity of fomething as black as a crow. The landlord of the house acknowledged knowledged that he might have been mistaken; and thus the whole mystery was explained.'

The company feemed to relish the story of the three black crows, which they confidered as an impromptu of Cadwallader's own invention; but, granting it to be true, they unanimously declared that it could have no weight in invalidating the testimony of divers perfons of honour, who had been witnesses of the magician's fupernatural skill: On the next day of confultation, the necromancer being in the chair, and his friend behind the curtain, the outward door was fcarce open, when a female visitant flounced in, and discovered to the magician the features of one of those inquisitive ladies, whose curiofity he knew his confederate had arouzed in the manner above described. She addressed herfelf to him with a familiar air, observing, that she had heard much of his great knowledge, and was come to be a witness of his art, which she defired him to difplay, in declaring what he knew to be her ruling paffion.

Cadwallader, who was no stranger to her disposition, assumed the pen without hesitation, and furnished her with an answer, importing, that the love of money predominated, and scandal possessed the next place in her heart. Far from being offended at his freedom, the commended his frankness with a finile; and, satisfied of his uncommon talents, expressed a desire of being better acquainted with his person; nay, she began to catechife him upon the private history of divers great fat ilies, in which he happened to be well verfed; and he, in a mysterious manner, dropped such artful hints of his knowledge, that the was amazed at his capacity, and actually asked if his art was communicable. The conjuror replied in the affirmative; but, at the fame time, gave her to understand, that it was attainable by those only who were pure and undefiled in point of chastity and honour; or such as, by a long course of penitence, had weaned themselves from all attachments to the flesh. She not only disapproved, but seemed to doubt the truth of this affertion; telling him, with a look of disdain, that his art was not worth having, if one could not use it for the benefit of one's pleasure: she had even penetration enough to take notice of an inconsistency in what he had advanced; and asked, why he himself exercised his knowledge for hire, if he was so much detached from all worldly concerns. "Come, come, doctor,' added she, 'you are in the right to be cautious against impertinent curiosity; but, perhaps, I may make it worth your while to be communicative."

These overtures were interrupted by a rap at the door, fignifying the approach of another client; upon which the lady enquired for his private passage, through which fhe might retire, without the risk of being feen; when the understood he was deficient in that convenience, the withdrew into an empty room, adjoining to the audience chamber, in order to conceal herfelf from the observation of the new comer. This was no other than the inamorata, who came by appointment to receive the folution of her doubts; and the mifanthrope, glad of an opportunity to expose her to the censure of fuch an indefatigable minister of fame as the person, who (he knew) would liften from the next apartment, laid her under the necessity of refreshing his remembrance with a recapitulation of her former confession, which was almost finished, when she was alarmed by a noise at the door, occasioned by two gentlemen, who attempted to enter by force.

Terrified at this uproar, which disconcerted the magician himself, she ran for shelter into the place which was pre-occupied by the other lady, who hearing this disturbance, had closed the window-shutters, that she might have the better chance of remaining unknown. Here they ensconced themselves, in the utmost consternation, while the necromancer, after some recollection, ordered Hadgi to open the door, and admit the rioters, who (he hoped) would be over-awed by the authority of his appearance. The janitor had no sooner obeyed his instructions, than in rushed a young libertine, who had been for some time on the town, together with his tutor, who was a worn-out debauchee, well known to the magician. They were both in that degree of intoxication necessary to prepare such dispositions for what they commonly call frolicks, and the fober part of mankind feel to be extravagant outrages against the laws of their country, and the peace of their fellow-Subjects. Having staggered up to the table, the senior, who undertook to be spokesman, faluted Cadwallader with- How do'ft do, old Capricorn? Thou feem'ft to be a most venerable pimp, and, I doubt not, hast abundance of differetion. Here is this young whoremafter (a true chip of the old venerable block his father) and myfelf, come for a comfortable cast of thy function. I don't mean that stale pretence of conjuring: damn futurity! let us live for the present, old Haly. Con ure me up a couple of hale wenches, and, I warrant, we shall get into the magick circle in a twinkling. What fays Galileo? What fays the reverend Brahe? Here is a purfe, you pimp: hark, how it chinks! This is fweeter than the musick of the spheres.'

Our necromancer, perplexed at this rencounter, made no reply; but taking up his wand, waved it round his head in a very mysterious motion, with a view of intimidating thefe forward visitants, who, far from being awed by this fort of evolution, became more and more obstreperous, and even the eatened to pull him by the beard if he would not immediately comply with their defire, Had he called his affociate, or even Hadgi, to his aid, he knew he could have foon calmed their turbulence; but, being unwilling to run the risk of a discovery, or even of a riot, he bethought himself of chastising their insolence in another manner, that would be less hazardous, and rather more effectual. In confequence of this fuggestion, he pointed his wand towards the door of the apartment in which the ladies had taken fanctuary; and the two rakes, understanding the hint, rushed in without hesitation.

The females, finding their place of retreat taken by affault, affault, ran about the room in great consternation, and were immediately taken prisoners by the affailants, who pulling them towards the windows, opened the shutters at the same instant of time, when (strange to tell!) one of the heroes discovered in the prize he had made, the very wife of his bosom: and his companion perceived that he had stumbled in the dark upon his own mother. Their mutual assonishment was unspeakable at this eclair cissement, which produced an universal silence for the space of several minutes. During this pause the ladies having recollected themselves, an exposulation was begun by the elder of the two, who roundly took her son to task for his disorderly life, which laid her under the disagreeable necessity of watching his motions, and detecting nim in such an insamous place.

While the careful mother thus exercised her talent for reprehension, the hopeful young gentleman, with an hand in each fob, stood whistling an opera-tune, without feeming to pay the most profound regard to his parent's reproof: and the other lady, in imitation of fuch a confummate pattern, began to open upon her husband, whom she bitterly reproached with his loofeness and intemperance, demanding to know what he had to alledge in alleviation of his present misconduct. The furprize occasioned by such an unexpected meeting had already in a great measure destroyed the effects of the wine he had so plentifully drank, and the first use he made of his recovered fobriety, was to revolve within himself the motives that could possibly induce his wife to give him the rendezvous in this manner. As he had good reason to believe she was utterly void of jealoufy, he naturally placed this rencontre to the account of another passion; and his chagrin was not at all impaired, by the effrontery with which she now prefumed to reprimand him. He liftened to her, therefore, with a grave or rather grim aspect; and to the question with which she concluded her rebuke, answered with great composure— All that I have to alledge, Madam, is, that the bawd has committed a mistake, in confeconfequence of which we are both disappointed: and fo, ladies, your humble servant.' So saying, he retired with manifest confusion in his looks; and as he passed through the audience-chamber, eyeing the conjuror askance, pronounced the epithet of precious rascal! with great emphasis. Meanwhile the junior, like a dutiful child, handed his mamma to her chair; and the other client, after having reviled the necromancer, because he could not foresee this event, went away in a state of mortification.

The coast being clear, Peregrine came forth from his den, and congratulated his friend upon the peaceable iffue of the adventure which he had overheard: but, that he might not be exposed to such inconvemence for the future, they refolved, that a grate should be fixed in the middle of the outward door, through which the conjuror himself might reconnoitre all the visitants before their admission; so that, to those whose appearance he might not like, Hadgi should, without opening, give notice that his mafter was engaged. By this expedient, too, they provided against those difficulties which Cadwallader must have encountered, in giving fatisfaction to strangers whom he did not know; for the original intention of the founders was to confine the practice of their art to people of fashion only, most of whom were personally known to the counterfeit magician and his coadjutors.

r

f

t

Indeed these associates, Cadwallader in particular, notwithstanding his boasted insight into the characters of life, never imagined that his pretended skill would be consulted by any but the weaker minded of the female sex, incited by that spirit of curiosity which he knew was implanted in their nature; but, in the course of his practice, he found himself cultivated in his preternatural capacity by people of all sexes, complexions, and degrees of reputation, and had occasion to observe, that when the passions are concerned, howsoever cool, cautious, and deliberate, the disposition may otherwise be, there is nothing so idle, frivolous, or absurd, to which they will not apply for encouragement and gratification. The last occurrence, according to the hopes and expectation of the confederates, was whispered about by the ladies concerned, in such a manner, that the whole affair was, in a few days, the universal topick of discourse, in which it was retailed with numberless embellishments, invented by the parties themselves, who had long indulged a pique at each other, and took this opportunity of enjoying their revenge.

which

These incidents, while they regaled their spleen, at the same time augmented the renown of the conjuror, who was described on both sides as a very extraordinary person in his way; and the alteration in his door was no sooner performed, than he had occasion to avail himself of it, against the intrusion of a great many, with whom he would have found it very difficult to fupport the fame he had acquired.

Among those who appeared at his grate, he perceived a certain clergyman, whom he had long known an humble attendant on the great, and with some the reputed minister of their pleasures: this Levite had difguised himself in a great coat, boots, and dress quite foreign to the habit worn by those of his function; and being admitted, attempted to impose himself as a country squire upon the conjuror, who calling him by his name, defired him to fit down. This reception corresponding with the report he had heard, touching our magician's art, the doctor faid he would lay afide all diffimulation. After having professed an implicit belief, that his supernatural knowledge did not proceed from any communication with evil fpirits, but was the immediate gift of Heaven, he declared the intention of his coming was to enquire into the health of a good friend and brother of his, who possessed a certain living in the country, which he named; and, as he was old and infirm, to know what space of time was allotted to him in this frail frate of mortality, that he might have the melancholy fatisfaction of attending him in his last moments, moments, and affifting him in his preparation for eternity.

The conjuror, who at once perceived the purport of this question, after a solemn pause, during which he seemed absorbed in contemplation, delivered this response to his consulter: 'Though I foresee some occurrences, I do not pretend to be omniscient. I know not to what age that clergyman's life will extend; but so far I can penetrate into the womb of time, as to discern, that the incumbent will survive his intended successor.' This dreadful sentence in a moment banished the blood from the face of the appaled consulter, who hearing his own doom pronounced, began to tremble in every joint; he listed up his eyes in the agony of fear, and saying—'The will of God be done!' withdrew in silent despondence, his teeth chattering with terror and dismay.

This client was fucceeded by an old man about the age of feventy-five, who being refolved to purchase a lease, desired to be determined in the term of years by the necromancer's advice; observing, that as he had no children of his own body, and had no regard for his heirs at law, the purchase would be made with a view to his own convenience only; and therefore, considering his age, he himself hesitated in the period of the lease, between thirty and threefcore years.

The conjuror, upon due deliberation, advised him to double the last specified term, because he distinguished in his features something portending extreme old age and second childhood, and he ought to provide for that state of incapacity, which otherwise would be attended with infinite misery and affliction. The superannuated wretch, thunder-struck with this prediction, held up his hands, and in the first transports of his apprehension, exclaimed—'Lord have mercy upon me! I have not wherewithal to purchase such a long lease, and I have long outlived all my friends; what then must become of me, sinner that I am, one hundred and twenty years hence!' Cadwallader, (who enjoyed his terror) under pretence of alleviating his concern, told him that what he had prognofficated did not deprive him of the means which he and every person had in their power, to curtail a life of misfortune; and the old gentleman went away, seemingly comforted with the assurance, that it would always be in his power to em-

fi

h

tl

87

C

f

h

to

W

ci

w ar

ot

OV

be

fid

di

W

W

he

fee

ha

ploy an halter for his own deliverance.

Soon after the retreat of this elder, the magician was visited by one of those worthies, known among the Romans by the appellation of Heredipetes, who had amassed a large fortune by a close attention to the immediate wants and weakness of raw unexperienced This honourable usurer had fold an annuity upon the life of a young spendthrift, being thereto induced by the affirmation of his physician, who had affured him his patient's conflitution was fo rotten, that he could not live one year to an end: he had, neverthelefs, made shift to weather eighteen months, and now feemed more vigorous and healthy than he had ever been known; for he was supposed to have nourished an hereditary pox from his cradle. Alarmed at this alteration, the feller came to confult Cadwallader not only about the life of the annuitant, but also concerning the state of his health at the time of his purchafing the annuity, purpofing to fue the physician for false intelligence, should the conjuror declare that the young man was found, when the doctor pronounced him difeafed. But this was a piece of fatisfaction be did not obtain from the mifanthrope; who, in order to punish his fordid disposition, gave him to understand, that the physician had told him the truth, and nothing but the truth; and that the young gentleman was in a fair way of attaining a comfortable old age. 'That is to fay,' cried the client, in the impatience of his mortification at this answer, 'bating accidents; for, thank God, the annuitant does not lead the most regular life; befides, I am credibly informed he is cholerick and rash; so that he may be concerned in a duel: then there are such things as riots in the street, in which a rake's rake's skull may be casually cracked; he may be overturned in a coach, overset in the river, thrown from a vicious horse, oversaken by a cold, endangered by a surfeit; but what I place my chief considence in, is an hearty pox, a distemper which hath been satal to his whole family. Not but that the issue of all these things is uncertain; and expedients might be sound which would more effectually answer the purpose. I know they have arts in India, by which a man can secure his own interest, in the salutation of a friendly shake by the hand; and I do not doubt that you who have lived in that country are master of the secret. To be sure, if you was inclined to communicate such a nostrum, there are abundance of people who would purchase it at a very high price.

Cadwallader understood this infinuation, and was tempted to amuse him in such a manner as would tend to his disgrace and confusion; but, considering that the case was of too criminal a nature to be tampered with, he withstood his desire of punishing this rapacious cormorant any other way than by telling him, he would not impart the secret for his whole fortune ten times doubled; so that the usurer retired, very much diffatisfied with the iffue of his confultation.

The next person who presented himself at this altar of intelligence, was an author, who recommended himfelf to a gratis advice, by observing that a prophet and poet were known by the fame appellation among the ancients; and that, at this day, both the one and the other spoke by inspiration. The conjuror refused to own this affinity, which, he faid, formerly sublisted, because both species of the Vates were the children of fiction; but as he himself did not fall under that predicament, he begged leave to difown all connection with the family of the poets; and the poor author would have been difmissed without his errand, though he offered to leave an ode as fecurity for the magician's fee, to be paid from the profits of his first third night, had not Cadwallader's curiofity prompted him to know VOL. III.

the fubject of this gentleman's enquiry. He therefore told him, that in confideration of his genius, he would for once fatisfy him without a fee; and defired him to specify the doubts in which he wished to be resolved.

The fon of Parnassus, glad of this condescension, for which he thanked the necromancer, gave him to understand, that he had some time before presented a play in manufcript to a certain great man, at the head of tafte, who had not only read and approved of the performance, but also undertaken to introduce and support it on the stage; that he (the author) was affured by this patron, that the play was already (in confequence of his recommendation) accepted by one of the managers, who had faithfully promifed to bring it to light; but that when he waited on this fame manager, to know when he intended to put his production in rehearfal, the man declared he had never feen or heard of the piece. 'Now, Mr. Conjuror,' faid he, 'I want to know whether or not my play has been prefented, and if I have any fort of chance of feeing it acted this winter.

Cadwallader, who had, in his younger days, fported among the theatrical muses, began to lose his temper at this question, which recalled the remembrance of his own disappointments; and dispatched the author with an abrupt answer, importing that the assairs of the stage were altogether without the sphere of his divination, being entirely regulated by the demons of dissipation.

mulation, ignorance, and caprice.

It would be an endless task to recount every individual response which our magician delivered in the course of his conjuration. He was consulted in all cases of law, physick, and trade, over and above the ordinary subjects of marriage and fornication; his advice and affistance were solicited by sharpers; who defired to possess an infallible method of cheating unperceived; by fortune-hunters, who wanted to make prize of widows and heiresses; by debauchees, who were disposed to lie with other men's wives; by coxcombs.

eombs, who longed for the death of their fathers; by wenches with child, who wished themselves rid of their burdens; by merchants, who had insured above value, and thirsted after the news of a wreck; by underwriters, who prayed for the gift of prescience, that they might venture money upon such ships only as should perform the voyage in safety; by Jews, who wanted to foresee the sluctuations of stock; by usurers, who advance money upon undecided causes; by clients, who were dubious of the honesty of their council: in short, all matters of uncertain issue were appealed to this tribunal; and, in point of calculation, De Moivre was utterly neglected.

CHAP. XII.

The Conjuror and his Affociate execute a Plan of Vengeance against certain Insidels who pretend to despise their Art; and Perégrine atchieves an Adventure with a young Nobleman.

BY these means, the whole variety of characters undisguised, passed as it were in review before the confederates, who, by divers ingenious contrivances, punished the most flagrant offenders with as much severity as the nature of their plan would allow. At length, they projected a scheme for chastising a number of their own acquaintance, who had all along professed the utmost contempt for the talent of this conjuror, which they endeavoured to ridicule in all companies, where his surprising art was the subject of discourse; not that they had sense and discernment enough to perceive the absurdity of his pretensions, but affected a singularity of opinion, with a view of insulting the inferior understanding of those who were deceived by such an idle impostor.

Peregrine, indeed, for obvious reasons, had always espoused their judgment in this case, and joined them in reviling the publick character of his friend: but he knew how far the capacities of those virtuosi extended, and had frequently caught them in the fact of recounting their exploits against the conjuror, which were the

Γ2

productions

productions of their own invention only. On these confiderations, his wrath was kindled against them, and he accordingly concerted measures with his coadjutor for overwhelming them with confusion and dismay.

In the first place, a report was spread by his emissaries, that the magician had undertaken to entertain their view with the appearance of any person whom his customers should desire to see, whether dead, or at the distance of a thousand leagues. This extraordinary proposal chancing to be the subject of conversation, in a place where most of those infiels were assembled, they talked of it in the usual style, and some of them swore the fellow ought to be pillored for his presumption.

Our hero, seizing this favourable opportunity, acquiesced in their remarks, and observed with great vehemence, that it would be a meritorious action to put the rascal to the proof, and then toss him in a blanket for non-performance. They were wonderfully pleased with this suggestion, and forthwith determined to try the experiment: though, as they understood the apparition would be produced to one only at a time, they could not immediately agree in the choice of the perfon who should stand the first brunt of the magician's skill. While each of them severally excused himself from this preference on various pretences, Peregrine readily undertook the post, expressing great considence of the conjuror's incapacity to give him the least cause of apprehension.

This point being fettled, they detached one of their number to Crabtree, in order to befpeak and adjust the hour and terms of the operation, which he insisted upon performing at his own apartment, where every thing was prepared for the occasion. At the appointed time, they went thither in a body, to the number of seven, in full expectation of detecting the impostor; and were received with such gloomy formality, as seemed to have an effect upon the countenances of some among them; though they were encouraged by the vivacity of Pickle.

Pickle, who affected a double share of petulance, for the more effectual accomplishment of his purpose.

Cadwallader made no reply to the interrogations they uttered, in the levivy of their infolence, at the first entrance, but ordered Hadgi to conduct them through the next room, that they might see there was no previous apparatus to affright their deputy with objects foreign to his undertaking. They found nothing but a couple of wax tapers burning on a table that stood with a chair by it, in the middle of the apartment, and returned to the audience-chamber, leaving Peregrine by himself, to encounter the phantom of that person, whom they should (without his knowledge) desire the magician to conjure up to his view.

All the doors being shut, and the company seated, a profound silence ensued, together with a face of dreadful expectation, encouraged by the blue stame of the candles, which were tipped with sulphur for that purpose, and heightened by the dismal sound of a large bell, which Hadgi tolled in the anti-chamber. Cadwallader having thus practised upon their ignorance and fear, desired them to name the person to be produced. After some whispers among themselves, one of them took the pen, and writing the name of Commodore Trunnion upon a slip of paper, put it into the hands of the magician, who rose from his seat, and opening the door of his closet, displayed to their view a skull, with thigh bones crossed upon a table covered with black cloth.

This melancholy spectacle made a remarkable impression upon the imaginations of the company, already preposlessed by the previous ceremony; and they began to survey one another with looks of consternation, while Cadwallader, shutting himself in the closet, that was contigous to the chamber in which his friend Peregrine was stationed, thrust the label with his uncle's name through a small chink in the partition, according to agreement, muttering all the time a fort of gibberish that encreased the panick of his audience; then returning to the chair, the knell was knolled again, and Pickle called aloud, 'Damn your mummery!

T 3

why don't you dispatch?'

This was a fignal to Crabtree, who thus certified of his having received the paper, stood up and waved his wand in the figure of an S. The motion being thrice performed, their ears were all of a sudden invaded by a terrible noise in the next room, accompanied with the voice of Peregrine, who exclaimed in a tone of horror and amazement—'Guard me, Heaven! my uncle Trunnion!' This ejaculation had such an effect upon the hearers, that two of them swooned with fear, a third fell upon his knees and prayed aloud, while the other three, in a transport of dismay and distraction, burst open the door, and rushed into the haunted chamber, where they found the table and chair overturned, and Peregrine extended, (in all appearance) without sense or motion, upon the floor.

They immediately began to chafe his temples; and the first symptom of his recovery, which they perceived, was an hollow groan; after which he pronounced these words: 'Merciful powers! if I live, I saw the commodore with his black patch, in the very cloaths he wore at my fifter's wedding.' This declaration compleated their aftonishment and terror; they observed a wildness in his looks, which he seemed to bend on fomething concealed from their view; and were infected by his appearance to fuch a pitch of superstition, that it would have been an easy matter to persuade them that the chair and table were apparitions of their forefathers. However, they conducted Peregrine into the council-chamber, where the conjuror and Hadgi were employed in ministering to those who had fainted. The patients having received the use of their faculties, Cadwallader affuming a double portion of feverity in his aspect, asked if they were not ashamed of their former incredulity, declaring, that he was ready to give them more convincing proofs of his art upon the spot, and

and would immediately recal three generations of their progenitors from the dead, if they were disposed to relish such company. Then turning to one of them whose great-grandsather had been hanged—' Are you,' said he, 'ambitious of seeing the first remarkable perfonage of your family? Say the word, and he shall appear.'

This youth who had been the most insolent and obstreperous of the whole society, and was now depressed with the same proportion of fear, alarmed at the proposal, assured the magician he had no curiosity of that sort remaining; and that what he had already seen, would, he hoped, have a good effect upon his suture life and conversation. Every one of these heroes made an acknowledgment and profession of the same kind, some of which were attended with tears; and Hadgi having provided chairs for the whole company, they departed exceedingly crest-fallen. Two of the number actually sickened with the agitation they had undergone, while our hero and his associate made themselves merry with the success of their enterprize.

But this scheme of fortune-telling did not engross his whole attention; he still continued to maintain his appearance in the beau-monde; and as his expence far exceeded his income, strove to contract intimacies with people of interest and power; he shewed himfelf regularly at court, paid his respects to them in all places of publick diversion, and frequently entered into their parties either of pleasure or cards. In the course of this cultivation, he happened one evening, at a certain chocolate-house, to overlook a match at picquet, in which he perceived a couple of sharpers making a prey of a young nobleman, who had neither temper nor skill sufficient to cope with such antagonists.

Our hero being a professed enemy to all knights of industry, could not bear to see them cheat in publick with such insolent audacity. Under pretence of communicating some business of importance, he begged the favour of speaking to the young gentleman in another comer of the room, and in a friendly manner cautioned him against the arts of his opponents. This hot-headed representative, far from thinking or owning himself obliged to Pickle for his good counsel, looked upon his advice as an insult upon his understanding; and replied with an air of ferocious displeasure, that he knew how to take care of his own concerns, and would not suffer either him or them to bubble him out of one fhilling.

Peregrine, offended at the affociation, as well as at the ingratitude and folly of this conceited coxcomb, expressed his refentment, by telling him, that he expected at least an acknowledgment for his candid intention; but he found his intellects too much warped by his vanity, to perceive his own want of capacity and experience. Inflamed by this reproof, the young nobleman challenged him to play for five hundred pounds, with many opprobrious, or at least contemptuous terms of defiance, which provoked our hero to accept the proposal. After the other had disengaged himself from the old rooks, who were extremely mortified at the interruption, the two young champions fat down, and Fortune acting with uncommon impartiality, Pickle, by the fuperiority of his talents, in two hours won to the amount of as many thousand pounds, for which he was obliged to take his antagonift's note, the fharpers having previously secured his ready-money.

Frantick with his lofs, the rash young man would have continued the game, and doubled stakes every time; so that Peregrine might have correated his acquisition to ten times the sum he had gained; but he thought he had already sufficiently chastised the presumption of the challenger, and was unwilling to empower Fortune to ravish from him the fruits of his success; he therefore declined my lord's proposal, unless he would play for ready money; and his lordship having in vain tried his credit among the company, our adventurer withdrew, leaving him in an extasy of rage and disappointment.

As the infolence of his behaviour had increased with his ill-luck, and he had given vent to divers expressions, which Peregrine took amis, our young gentleman refolved to augment his punishment, by teazing him with demands which could not, he knew, be immediately fatisfied; and the next day fent Pipes to his father's house with the note, which was drawn payable upon The debtor, who had gone to bed half diftracted with his misfortune, finding himself waked with fuch a difagreeable dunn, loft all patience, curfed Pickle, threatened his messenger, blasphemed with horrible execrations, and made fuch a noise as reached the ears of his father; who ordering his fon to be called into his presence, examined him about the cause of that uproar which had disturbed the whole family. The young gentleman after having essayed to amuse him with fundry equivocations, which ferved only to increase his suspicion and defire of knowing the truth, acknowledged that he had loft fome money over night at cards, to a gamester, who had been so impertinent as to fend a message, demanding it that morning, though he had told the fellow, that it would not fuit him to pay it immediately. The father, who was a man of honour, reproached him with great severity for his profligate behaviour in general, and this scandalous debt in particular, which he believed to be some trifle; then giving him a bank note for five hundred pounds, commanded him to go and discharge it without loss of time. This well-principled heir took the money, but instead of waiting upon his creditor, he forthwith repaired to the gaming-house in hopes of retrieving his loss; and before he rose from the table, faw his note mortgaged for feven eighths of it's value.

Meanwhile, Pickle, incenfed at the treatment which his fervant had received, and informed of his lordship's fecond loss, which aggravated his resentment, determined to preserve no medium, and taking out a writ the same day, put it immediately in execution upon the body of his debtor, just as he stepped into his chair at the door of White's Chocolate-house. The prifoner being naturally sierce and haughty, attempted to draw upon the bailiss, who disarmed him in a twinkling; and this effort served only to heighten his disgrace, which was witnessed by a thousand people, most of whom laughed very heartily at the adventure of a lord's being arrested.

Such a publick transaction could not long escape the knowledge of his father, who, that very day, had the fatisfaction to hear that his fon was in a spunging-house. In confequence of this information, he fent his fleward to learn the particulars of the arrest, and was equally offended, furprized, and concerned, when he underflood the nature of the debt, which he imagined his fon had already discharged. Unwilling to pay such a confiderable fum for a spendthrift, whom he had but too much indulged, and who in lefs than one week might involve himself in such another difficulty, the old gentleman wrote a letter to Peregrine, representing what a hardflip it would be upon him to forfeit fuch fums by the indifcretion of a fon, whose engagements he was not bound to fulfil, and defiring fome mitigation in his demands, as it was not a debt contracted for value received, but incurred without subjecting him to the least damage or inconvenience.

Our adventurer no fooner received this letter, than he went in person to wait upon the author, to whom he, in a candid manner, related the particular circumstances of the match, together with the ingratitude and audacity of his son, which he owned had stimulated him to such measures as he otherwise would have scorned to take. The nobleman acknowledged the revenge was hardly adequate to the provocation, and condemned the conduct of his son with such justice and integrity, as disarmed Peregrine of his resentment, and disposed him to give him an undoubted proof of his own disinterestedness, which he immediately exhibited, by producing the note, and tearing it to pieces, after having affured his lordship that the writ should be withdrawn, and the prisoner discharged before night.

having

The earl, who perfectly well understood the value of money, and was no stranger to the character of mankind, stood amazed at this sacrifice, which Pickle protested was offered by his esteem for his lordship: and after having complimented him upon his generosity, in a very uncommon strain of encomium, begged the favour of his acquaintance, and insisted upon his dining with him next day. The youth, proud of having met with such an opportunity to distinguish himself, in less than an hour performed every article of his promise; and in the morning was visited by the debtor, who came by the express order of his father, to thank him for the obligation under which he was laid, and to ask pardon for the offence he had given.

This condescention was very glorious for our hero, who graciously received his submission, and accompanied him to dinner, when he was carefied by the old earl with marks of particular affection and esteem. Nor was his gratitude confined to exterior civility; he offered him the use of his interest at court, which was very powerful, and repeated his desire of serving him so pressingly, that Peregrine thought he could not dispense with the opportunity of affishing his absent friend Godfrey, in whose behalf he begged the insuence of his lordship.

The earl, pleased with this request, which was another proof of the young gentleman's benevolence, said, he would not fail to pay the utmost regard to his recommendation; and in six weeks a captain's commission was actually signed for the brother of Emilia, who was very agreeably surprized at the intimation he received from the war-office, though he was utterly ignorant of the canal through which he obtained that promotion.

CHAP. XIII.

Peregrine is celebrated as a Wit and Patron, and proceeds to entertain himself at the Expence of whom it did concern.

IN the mean time, Peregrine flourished in the gay fcenes of life, and (as I have already observed) had divers opportunities of profiting in the way of marriage, had not his ambition been a little too inordinate. and his heart still biassed by a passion, which all the levity of youth could not balance, nor all the pride of vanity overcome. Nor was our hero unmarked in the world of letters and taste: he had signalized himself in feveral poetical productions, by which he had acquired a good fhare of reputation; not that the pieces were fuch as ought to have done much honour to his genius: but any tolerable performance from a person of his figure, and supposed fortune, will always be considered by the bulk of readers as an instance of astonishing capacity: though the very same production, ushered into the world with the name of an author in less affluent circumstances, would be justly difregarded and despised: fo much is the opinion of most people influenced and overawed by ridiculous confiderations.

Be this as it will, our young gentleman was no fooner diffinguished as an author, than he was marked out as a patron by all the starving retainers to poetry; he was folemnized in odes, celebrated in epigrams, and fed with the milk of foft dedication. His vanity even relished this incense: and though his reason could not help despising those that offered it, not one of them was fent away unowned by his munificence. He began to think himself, in good earnest, that superior genius which their flattery had described; he cultivated acquaintance with the wits of fashion, and even composed in secret a number of bon mots, which he uttered in company as the impromptus of his imagination. In this practice, indeed, he imitated some of the most renowned geniuses of the age, who (if the truth were known ) known) have laboured in secret, with the sweat of their brows, for many a repartee which they have vended as the immediate production of fancy and expression. He was so successful in this exercise of his talents, that his fame actually came in competition with that great man, who had long sat at the helm of wit: and in a dialogue that once happened between them, on the subject of a cork-screw, wherein the altercation was discharged (according to Bayes) slap for slap, dash for dash, our hero was judged to have the better of his lord-ship, by some of the minor satellites that commonly surround and reslect the rays of such mighty luminaries.

In a word, he dipped himself so far in these literary amusements, that he took the management of the pit into his direction, putting himself at the head of those criticks who call themselves the town; and in that capacity chaftifed feveral players who had been rendered infolent and refractory by unmerited fuccess. As for the new productions of the stage, though generally unspirited and insipid, they always enjoyed the benefit of his influence and protection; because he never disliked the performance fo much as he sympathized with the poor author, who stood behind the scenes in the most dreadful suspense, trembling, as it were, on the very brink of damnation: yet, though he extended his generofity and compassion to the humble and needy, he never let flip one opportunity of mortifying villainy and arrogance. Had the executive power of the legislature been vested in him, he would have doubtless devised a strange species of punishment for all offenders against humanity and decorum; but, restricted as he was, he employed his invention in fubjecting them to the ridicule and contempt of their fellow-fubjects.

It was with this view he set on foot the scheme of conjuration, which was still happily carried on, and made use of the intelligence of his friend Cadwallader; though he sometimes converted this advantage to the purposes of gallantry, being (as the reader may have perceived) of a very amorous complexion. He not only acted the reformer, or rather the castigator, in the fashionable world, but also exercised his talents among the inferior class of people, who chanced to incur his difpleasure.

One mischievous plan that entered our hero's imagination, was suggested by two advertisements published in the same paper, by persons who wanted to borrow certain fums of money, for which they promifed to give undeniable fecurity. Peregrine, from the style and manner of both, concluded they were written by attornies, a species of people for whom he entertained his uncle's aversion. In order to amuse himself, and some of his friends, with their disappointment, he wrote a letter figned A. B. to each advertiser, according to the address specified in the newspaper, importing, that if he would come with his writings to a certain coffeehouse near the Temple, precisely at fix o'clock in the evening, he would find a person sitting in the right hand box next the window, who would be glad to treat with him about the subject of his advertisement, and, should his fecurity be liked, would accommodate him with the fum which he wanted to raife. Before the hour of this double appointment, Pickle, with his friend Cadwallader, and a few more gentlemen, to whom he had thought proper to communicate the plan, went to the coffee-house, and seated themselves near the place that was destined for their meeting.

The hope of getting money had such an evident effect upon their punctuality, that one of them arrived a considerable time before the hour; and having reconnoitered the room, took his station according to the direction he had received, fixing his eyes upon a clock that stood before him, and asking of the bar-keeper if it was not too slow. He had not remained in this posture many minutes, when he was joined by a strange figure, that waddled into the room with a bundle of papers in his bosom, and the sweat running over his nose. Seeing a man in the box to which he had been directed, he took it for granted he was the lender; and as soon

re

15

i-

d

W

to

le

y

d

d

te

to

at

24 ie

d

h

d

e

is

1.

d

e

at

f-

2

i-

-

at

is

1-

e,

n

1,

n

eyes

as he could recover his breath, which was almost exhausted by the dispatch he had made- Sir, faid he, I prefume you are the gentleman I was to meet about that loan.' Here he was interrupted by the other, who eagerly replied—' A B. Sir, I suppose.'—' The same, cried the last comer; 'I was afraid I should be too late; for I was detained beyond my expectation, by a nobleman in the other end of the town that wants to mortgage a small trifle of his estate, about a thousand a year; and my watch happens to be in the hands of the maker, having met with an accident a few nights ago, which set it asleep. But howsomever, there's no time lost, and I hope this affair will be transacted to the fatisfaction of us both. For my own part, I love to do good offices myself, and therefore I expect no thing but what is fair and honest of other people."

His new friend was exceedingly comforted by this declaration, which he confidered as a happy omen of his fuccess; and the hope of fingering the cash operated visibly in his countenance, while he expressed his satisfaction at meeting with a person of such candour and 'The pleasure,' faid he, 'of dealing with humanity. an easy conscientious man, is, in my opinion, superior to that of touching all the money upon earth; for what joy can be compared with what a generous mind feels in befriending its fellow-creatures? I was never fo happy in my life, as at one time in lending five hundred pounds to a worthy gentleman in diffress, without infifting upon rigid fecurity. Sir, one may eafily diffinguish an upright man by his countenance; for example now, I think I could take your word for ten thousand pounds.' The other with great joy protested, that he was right in his conjecture, and returned the compliment a thousand fold; by which means the expectation of both was wound up to a very interesting pitch; and both at the same instant began to produce their napers, in the untying of which their hands shook with transports of eagerness and impatience, while their eyes were so intent upon their work, that they did not perceive the occupation of each other.

U 2

At length, one of them, having got the flart of the other, and unrolled feveral skins of musty parchment, directed his view to the employment of his friend; and seeing him sumbling at his bundle, asked if that was a blank bond and conveyance which he had brought along with him. The other, without lifting up his eyes, or desisting from his endeavours to loose the knot, which by this time he had applied to his teeth, answered his question in the negative, observing, that the papers in his hand were the security which he proposed to give for the money.

This reply converted the looks of the enquirer into a ftare of infinite stolidity, accompanied with the word, 'Anan!' which he pronounced in a tone of fear and astonishment. The other, alarmed at this note, cast his eyes towards the supposed lender, and was in a moment insected by his aspect. All the exultation of hope that sparkled in their eyes was now succeeded by disappointment and dismay; and while they gazed ruefully at each other, their features were gradually elongated, like the transient curls of a Middle-row periwig.

This emphatick filence was, however, broke by the last comer, who, in a faultering accent, desired the other to recollect the contents of his letter. 'Of your letter!' cried the first, putting into his hand the advertisement he had received from Pickle; which he had no sooner perused, than he produced his own for the satisfaction of the other party: so that another gloomy pause ensued, at the end of which each uttered a profound sigh, or rather groan, and rising up, sneaked off without farther communication; he who seemed to be the most afflicted of the two, taking his departure with an exclamation of—'Humbugged, egad!'

Such were the amusements of our hero, though they did not engross his whole time, some part of which was dedicated to nocturnal riots and revels, among a set of young noblemen, who had denounced war against temperance,

temperance, economy, and common fense, and were, indeed, the devoted fons of tumult, waste, and prodigality. Not that Peregrine relished those scenes, which were a fuccession of absurd extravagance, devoid of all true spirit, taste, and enjoyment: but his vanity prompted him to mingle with those who were intitled the choice spirits of the age; and his disposition was fo pliable, as to adapt itself easily to the measures of his company, where he had not influence enough to act in the capacity of director. Their rendezvous was at a certain tavern, which might be properly styled the temple of excess, where they left the choice of their fare to the difcretion of their landlord, that they might fave themselves the pains of exercising their own reason; and in order to avoid the trouble of adjusting the bill, ordered the waiter to declare how much every individual must pay, without specifying the articles of the This proportion generally amounted to two guineas per head for each dinner and fupper, and frequently exceeded that fum; of which the landlord durst not abate, without running the risk of having his nofe flit for his moderation.

· But this was a puny expence, compared with that which they often incurred by the damage done to the furniture and fervants, in the madness of their intoxication, as well as the lofs they fuftained at hazard, an amusement to which all of them had recourse in the progress of their debauches. This elegant diversion was introduced, encouraged, and promoted, by a crew of rapacious fharpers, who had made themselves necesfary companions to this hopeful generation, by the talent of pimping and buffoonery. Though they were univerfally known, even by those they preyed upon, to have no other means of earning their livelihood, than the most infamous and fraudulent practices, they were careffed and courted by these infatuated dupes, when a man of honour, who would not join in their excesses, would have been treated with the utmost indignity and contempt.

e

r

it

r

n

-

1,

-

R

-

y

U 3

Though

Though Peregrine, in his heart, detested those abandoned courses, and was a professed enemy to the whole fociety of gamesters, whom he considered and always treated as the foes of human kind, he was infenfibly accustomed to licentious riot, and even led imperceptibly into play by those cormorants, who are no less dangerous in the art of cheating, than by their confummate skill in working upon the passions of unwary youth. They are, for the most part, naturally cool, phlegmatick, and crafty, and by a long habit of diffimulation, have gained an absolute dominion over the hasty pasfions of the heart, fo that they engage with manifest advantage over the impatience and impetuolity of a warm, undefigning temper, like that of our young gentleman, who, when he was heated with wine, misled by example, invited on one hand, and defied on the other, forgot all his maxims of caution and fobriety, and plunging into the reigning folly of the place, had frequent occasions to moralize in the morning upon the loss of the preceding night.

These penitential resections were attended with many laudable resolutions of profiting by the experience which he had so dearly purchased; but he was one of those philosophers, who always put off, till another day, the commencement of their reformation.

END OF THE THIRD VOLUME.

